CRAWFORD, CRAWFORDJOHN, ABINGTON, AND ELVANFOOT.

LEADHILLS is a village in the parish of Crawford, 46 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 44 s. from Glasgow, 15 s. from Douglas, and 16 N. from Thornhill, situate in the Alpine region, amidst a wilderness of dismal, heathy mountains, on the road from Glasgow to Dumfries. It derives its name from being the residence of workmen employed in the lead mines, which are the most valuable in Scotland, and perhaps in Britain. The mines have produced in some years 18,000 bars, of nine stone (avoirdupois) the bar; in the year 1809, 25,200 bars were produced, which at £32 per ton (the then price) amounted to £45,560; the ore dug from these mines affords a very liberal proportion of silver. Gold was found in the sand of the mountains at an early period; during the reign of James VI. of Scotland, Sir Bevis Bulmer, a German, by order of Queen Elizabeth, was sent to collect gold dust in the waters of Elvin and Glenogour, with which they were said to abound; he had a house at Wanlockhead, where he deposited the fruits of his labour. The attempt was revived by the late Lord Hopetoun, but soon discontinued, as the product was inadequate to the expense. The miners of Leadhills, during their spare hours, collected 1,000 grains of gold in 1881, and presented it to the Earl of Hopetoun, lord of the manor, on the attainment of his majority. It was at Leadhills that Allan Ramsay, the poet, was born and spent his earliest years. In the village is a good inn, the Hopetoun Arms. Fairs are held on the second Friday of June and the last Friday of October. In 1881 the village contained 1,065, and in 1891, 998 inhabitants.

CRAWFORD is a small village in the parish of its name, 8 miles N.E. from Leadhills, situate on the main road between Glasgow and Carlisle; it contains a good inn and a parish church, a splendid building, erected in 1874. The name is said to be derived from the British compound Craw-ford, signifying the "passage" or the "road of blood"; an appellation supposed to have been obtained from the locality having been the scene of some bloody contest between the people of the country and their Roman invaders. The parish embraces an area of 65,400 acres. Population in 1881, 1,762, and in 1891, 1,634, of which the village contained 636.

CRAWFORDJOHN is a parish in the upper part of Clydesdale, contiguous to the foregoing parish, and on the east of Muirkirk and Douglas. The small river named Dunsnoton water takes its rise at the head of the district. On the top of Netherhill are the vestiges of an extensive encampment, and in other parts of the parish are the ruins of two ancient castles. The village, which is small, is situated about a mile and a half S.W. of the main road, and about 6 miles N. of Leadhills; it contains a parish church and school, and also a Free church. The country around is rich in beautiful, bold, and varied scenery, with lofty hills and flowing streams. In the village are two respectable inns, the Crown, and the Colebrooke Arms. The acreage of the parish is 26,557, and its population was in 1881, 848, and in 1891, 789.

ABINGTON is a small village in the parish of Crawfordjohn, from which place it is 6 miles E. distant, and is a station on the Caledonian Railway. The only thing worthy of notice here is Abington House, the residence of Sir Edward Arthur Colebrooke, Bart. There are a Free church, a good inn, and a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited.

ELVANFOOT is a small village in the parish of Crawford, and is a Station on the Caledonian railway; it is 5 miles distant from Leadhills, for which place it is the nearest station. The population is included in Crawford.

LESMAHAGOW,

ABBEY GREEN, COALBURN, CROSSFORD, KIRKMUIRHILL, BLACKWOOD, BOGHEAD, AUCHENHEATH, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LESMAHAGOW is a parish and village, the latter, also called ABBEY GREEN, being situated on the river Nethan, one of the tributaries of the Clyde, and in the Upper Ward of Lanarkshire. It is a beautiful village, almost in the centre of the parish, 38 miles W. from Edinburgh, 23 S.E. from Glasgow, and 6 S.W. from Lanark. It takes its name from the old priory, on the site of which the present Established church was erected by the heritors of the parish in 1803.
The old priory was founded by David I. in the year 1140, and dedicated by him to St. Machute. An annual fair was formerly held on the 15th of November, at Lesmahagow, entitled St. Machute's fair, but this is now discontinued. The parish of Lesmahagow is very extensive, being twelve miles square, and is one of the richest in minerals in Scotland, coal, ironstone and limestone being obtained in large quantities. In obtaining and working these minerals a considerable number of the inhabitants find employment. Their transport is facilitated by means of a railway, which, south of Coalburn, is for this traffic only. It passes through or near most of the mines, and joins the Caledonian main line at Motherwell.
The British Linen Co. Bank and the Royal Bank of Scotland have branches here. Lesmahagow village contains three comfortable inns, the Abbey Green, the Commercial, and the Masons' Arms, all of which are posting houses. Besides the parish church, there are a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and some well-conducted schools.

The noble ruins of Craignethan or Draphane Castle, the property of the Earl of Home, of Douglas, and immortalised by Sir Walter Scott as Tullietudlem Castle, in his novel of "Old Mortality," are well deserving the notice of the tourist. A room is still shown where, it is said, the unfortunate Queen Mary took refuge after her escape from Lochleven Castle. There are two hiring fairs and two others for general business, held during the year. In the month of December are three market days, known as Big Wednesdays. The parish of Lesmahagow embraces an area of 41,299 statute acres, and contained in 1891 a population of 9,949, and in 1891, 9,752.

COALBURN is a mining village, situated about 4 miles S. of Abbey Green. There is a station here on the Lesmahagow branch of the Caledonian railway.

bank of the river Clyde, near the confluence of the Nethan and that river. It is about 5 miles N. by E. from Abbey Green, and 4½ N.W. from Lanark. There are a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and a public school. Population in 1881, 816, and in 1891, 818.

KIRKMUIRHILL and BLACKWOOD are villages a short distance to each other, about 3 miles N.W. from Abbey Green, on the Glasgow road.
There is a commodious public school and railway station at the latter place, and a United Presbyterian church at the former.
BOGHEAD is a small village about a mile and half distant from Kirkmuirhill. AUCHENHEATH, a mining village and a railway station, is about 2½ miles N. from Abbey Green. Populations in 1891: Kirk-muirhill, 519; Auchenheath, 516; Blackwood, 873.

MOTHERWELL,

CARFIN, DALZIEL, NEWARTHILL, NEW STEVENSTON, OMOA, CLELAND, AND CRAIGNEUK.

MOTHERWELL is a police burgh and post town, situated for the greater part in the parish of DALZIEL, and middle ward of Lanarkshire, 2 miles N.E. from Hamilton, and 11 S.E. from Glasgow. Within the recollection of persons still living, Motherwell had no existence as a village. Its name is derived from three farms, called respectively High, Low, and North Motherwell, and these doubtless received their designation from an adjoining spring called Ladywell or Motherwell. The progress of Motherwell has been very rapid, and owes its prosperity in a great extent to the coal mines in its neighbourhood. In November, 1887, a handsome Town Hall was opened, the cost of erection being about £7,000. There are several extensive works here, the two largest being those of Messrs. David Colville and Sons, and the Glasgow Iron and Steel Co. Limited, each of which employ over 1,000 hands. Places of worship comprise two Established, two Free, and two United Presbyterian churches, and Evangelical Union, Primitive Methodist, Baptist, and Roman Catholic chapels. There are branches of the Bank of Scotland, British Linen Co., the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited. The town is supplied with water from Coldstream and Netherton, near Carlisle, and the streets are lighted with gas. Motherwell is a principal station and junction on the Caledonian railway. The parish of Dalziel has an area of 8,039 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 13,853, and in 1891, 19,204. The population of the burgh in 1881 was 12,904, but is now (1892), 20,049.

CARFIN is a small village in the parish of Bothwell and near to Holytown station on the Caledonian railway, one mile distant from and in the postal delivery of Motherwell. Several collieries, a boiler works, and a chemical works, are in the district. Population in 1881, 1,428, and in 1891, 2,069.

NEWARTHILL is a village also in the parish of Bothwell, postal delivery of Motherwell, about 3½ miles N.W. therefrom. The United Presbyterians have a place of worship here. Population in 1898 between 1,300 and 1,400.

ORAIGNEUX is a small village in Motherwell postal district, situated between that town and Wishaw. Here are the works of the Etina Iron and Steel Co., Established and Free churches, a Roman Catholic chapel, and a Board school.

NEW STEVENSTON is a village in the parish of Bothwell, near Holytown station. There is a Free church here.

OMOA is a village in the parish of Shotts and postal delivery of Motherwell, about 4 miles N.E. therefrom, and is a station on the Caledonian railway. Several collieries, an iron foundry, a boiler works, stone quarries and brick works are the main support of the district.

CLELAND is a large village in the parish of Shotts, and postal delivery of Motherwell, from which place it is 4½ miles N.E. There are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, a Roman Catholic chapel, and a Board school here. In 1881 Cleland and Omoa together contained a population of 1,508, and in 1891, 1,978.

Hotel, several times daily

STRATHAVEN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF GLASSFORD AND STONEHOUSE, AND THE VILLAGES OF WEST QUARTER AND CHAPELTON.

STRATHAVEN is a market town and burgh of barony, in the parish of AVONDALE, 44 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 15 s. by E. from Glasgow, 28 N.E. from Ayr, 21 E. by N. from Kilmarnock, 14 W.
from Lanark, and 7½ S. from Hamilton, situated on the river Avon.
The town is of considerable antiquity, but possesses no pretension to elegance in its dwellings, or uniformity in the arrangement of them. Like many other towns, not only in the British islands, but throughout the European continent, it seems to have been indebted for its origin to the feudal era, when every chieftain had his castle or fortress for safety or aggression; the ruins of one of these frow-ing edifices, presenting "shattered and baggard walls," stand on an eminence to the south, overhanging Strathaven. The excellent breed of horses for which Lanarkshire is so much distinguished was introduced to this vicinity, upwards of a century ago, by a Duke of Hamilton, who brought some fine horses from Holstein, and placed them in the parks attached to the castle; from this origin the race of draught cattle was propagated over the entire district. The offspring of the cow has also conferred distinction on this town. The herbage of the neighbourhood is supposed to be of a highly nutritious quality, and peculiarly adapted for the improvement of the flesh and milk of cattle; in consequence of this Strathaven veal has long been held in high estimation. Strathaven is not a place of much trade, the most prominent branches are cheese and grain dealing and the weaving of silk and cotton goods; there are two or three respectable inns and posting houses, and three branch banking establishments. The town was erected into a burgh of barony in the year 1450 in avour of the then powerful chief, William Earl of Douglas, and is governed by a baron bailie. Besides the Established church, there are three United Presbyterian churches, a Free church, and a Baptist and a Roman Catholic chapel. A well-built and commodious school has been erected by the School Board. On the south side of the river Avon a Roman road can be distinctly traced for several miles. The market, which is held on Thursday, is well attended; fairs are held on the first Thursdays in January, March, and April, for cattle and hiring servants; Thursday in Whitsun week, the last Thursday in June, the second Thursday in August, and (the old fair) on the 2nd of November. The parish of Avondale embraces an area of 37,666 statute acres, and in 1881 had a population of 5,466, and in 1891, 5,069, of which Strathaven contained 3,586.

GLASSFORD is a parish of 6,142 acres, in the Middle Ward of Lanarkshire, situate on the road between Kilbride and Strathaven. There are two villages in the parish named WEST QUARTER and CHAPELTON; at the former are the parish church and school, and at the latter a Free church and school, and an Established church. Population in 1881, 1,452, and in 1891, 1,817.

STONEHOUSE is a parish and village in the Middle Ward of Lanarkshire, situate on the south side of the Avon, 8 miles S.E. from Hamilton. The inhabitants of the village are mostly engaged in hand-loom weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers, and mining. There are places of worship for members of the Establishment, and Free and United Presbyterian churches. The village contains three schools, which are well attended. Acreage of the parish, 6,241; population in 1881, 3,178, and in 1891, 3,400.

WISHAW,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF BENHAR, BONKLE, CAMBUSNETHAN, CHAPEL, DYKEHEAD, HARTHILL, MORNINGSIDE,

NEW MAINS, OVERTOWN, SHOTTS, STANE, WATERLOO, AND NEIGHBOURHOODES.

WISHAW is a police burgh and an endowed parish, in the middle ward of Lanarkshire, 15 miles S.E. from Glasgow, and 32 W. from Edinburgh. Wishaw formerly formed part of the parish of Cambusnethan, from which it has been disjoined as an ecclesiastical division, though it still forms part of the parish for parochial purposes. It was made a burgh under the Scotch Police Act of 1850. The 1862 Act was after its passing adopted, and the burgh is now governed under that Act by three magistrates and nine commissioners. It has been extended, and now includes within its limits the village of CAMBUSNETHAN. The town is pleasantly situated on the face of a hill, and is formed of several spacious streets, Main street being the principal one. The shops are well stocked, and would do credit to towns of greater pretensions. A police court is held at the Town Hall as occasion requires. The Cambusnethan parish church, on Kirk Brae, is a handsome structure, and the Wishaw parish church (quoad sacra), also in Main street, is a large building, with a spire and clock. The Free Church and United Presbyterian Church have commodious edifices. The Reformed Presbyterians have a neat church off Main street, and there are other places of worship belonging to the Baptists, Evangelical Union, and Primitive Methodists. The Roman Catholics have a large and beautiful church, in Young street, with schools in connection; and there is an Episcopal church now (1893) in course of erection in Belhaven terrace. The branch banks are the British Linen Company, Clydesdale Bank, Limited, Royal Bank of Scotland, and the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited. There are several schools, the principal being the Wishaw Academy, and the public school; there is also a public library. Within less than fifty years, previous to the opening of the district by railway, Wishaw was a place of little importance; but since then, owing to the increased facilities offered for the despatch of the produce of this district, it has advanced with great rapidity. Two newspapers, the Wishaw Press and the Wishaw Herald, are published here weekly. The staple trade of the district is coal, of which mineral upwards of one million tons is sent from Wishaw annually. Among the establishments which give employment to a great number of workmen are the Wishaw Iron and Steel Works, two iron foundries, the fire-clay works of Messrs. W. Hudsphit & Co., the distillery of Messrs. J. M. Mackenzie & Co., the malleable iron works of Messrs. John Williams & Co., the Belhaven Iron and Steel Co.'s Works, the Pather Iron and Steel Co. Limited, and the railway wagon and axle works of Messrs. R. Y. Pickering & Co., Limited. There are large cattle sales every Tuesday and Thursday, conducted by Messrs. J. & J. Marshall, auctioneers, Carlisle. The gentlemen's seats in the neighbourhood are numerous—Wishaw Castle, being the seat of Lord Belhaven; Allanton House, Sir Alan Henry Seton-Stewart, Bart.; Coltness House, James Houldsworth, Esq.; Cambusnethan House, the seat of Major-General Lockhart, C.B.; Garrison Tower, the residence of James Scott, Esq., and Murdostown Castle, the seat of Robert King Stewart, Esq. About two miles S.W. from the town and near to the Clyde is an ancient graveyard, the burial place of the lords of Belhaven and Stenton, and it is said that the original parish church stood upon this site, but no trace of it whatever now remains. In the graveyard stands an elegant memorial tomb of the late Lord Belhaven, who died in 1668. It was erected by his widow, and is a handsome structure of freestone, with tablets of granite on three of its sides, upon one of which are recorded the dates of birth and decease of the late nobleman. The others are inscribed with scriptural texts, &c. It stands about twenty-eight feet in height, and is about twenty feet wide at the base, and is elaborately sculptured throughout. In the graveyard are many memorials, rudely but curiously carved, and denoting considerable antiquity. Amongst them may be noted a headstone with the following inscription:—"Here lies Arthur Inglis, in Netherthorn, who was shot at Stockelton Dyke, by bloody Graham, of Clavershouse, July, 1679, for his adherence to the work of God and Scotland's covenanted work of reformation. Rev. xii. 2. Erected in the year 1753." The reverse of the stone bears a rhyming epitaph of eight lines. Several of the gravestones bear lengthwise the simple device of a sword. There are also memorials to Sir James Stuart Denham, Bart., and his consort, erected by their son, General Sir James Stuart, Bart. In 1821 the burgh of Wishaw had a population of 15,113, and in 1891, 14,869.

CAMBUSNETHAN is a parish, the village being about a mile E. from Wishaw, with which burgh it is now incorporated. The ancient parish church is situated here, and is surrounded by a burial ground. The former is now an ivy-grown ruin and has long been disused, but interments still take place in the graveyard, which has been greatly extended and is tastefully kept. The present church, a modern edifice with square tower, is in close proximity, as are also the Board schools. There is also a Free church in the village. The parish of Cambusnethan embraces an area of 16,608 statute acres, and in 1891 had a population of 20,823, and in 1891, 22,710 persons.

BONKLE is a village in Cambusnethan parish, situated 5 miles E. from Wishaw. Allanton House, a seat of Sir Alan Henry Seton-

Stewart, is in the village. There is a United Presbyterian church here. New Mains is the nearest railway station, half a mile distant. Population returned with the parish.

MORNINGSIDE is a village in Cambusnethan parish, lying about 2 miles E. from Wishaw. There are stations here upon the North British and Caledonian railways, and collieries of the Morningside Coal Co. and Mr. Thomas Gray, and an iron and brass foundry; the manufacture of drain pipes, fire-clay and terra cotta goods is carried on by Messrs. London and Russell, whose works are very extensive. There is a Board school in the village. Population in 1881, 740, and in 1891, 780.

CHAPEL is a hamlet adjoining Morningside, the inhabitants of which are chiefly employed in the adjacent collieries. Population in 1881, 414, and in 1891, 420.

NEW MAINS is a considerable village in Cambusnethan parish, about 2 miles E. from Wishaw, and is a station on the Caledonian line; in it are situated the extensive works of the Coltness Iron Company, Limited, who have twelve blast furnaces in operation, producing over 2,000 tons of pig iron weekly. Commodious schools have been erected by the company for the education of the children of their workpeople. The Coltness Memorial church was erected by James Houldsworth, Esq., of Coltness, in memory of his eldest son. The village has a neat appearance, the streets being regularly formed; and the inhabitants are supplied with gas by a company. The village is provided with an excellent water supply by the local authority of Cambusnethan. There is a school for Roman Catholics. Population in 1881, 8,000, and in 1891, 8,020.

OVERTOWN is a village in the same parish, 2 miles S.E. from Wishaw, and is a station on the Caledonian line. There is an Established church in the village, and schools maintained by the Coltness Iron Company, Limited, also a school for Roman Catholics. Population in 1881, 1,293, and in 1891, 2,180.

SHOTTS is a large and extensive parish, with a station on the Caledonian railway, 6 miles N. from Wishaw, bordering on Stane, and includes the villages of HARTHILL, BENHAR, and DYKEHEAD. The Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, has a branch at Shotts. There is also a fine hotel close to the station. In all the above places coal and iron works are the sole support of the inhabitants. Acreage, 24,944. Population of the parish in 1881, 11,214, and in 1891, 11,930.

STANE is a thriving and populous village about 7 miles N. from Wishaw, bordering on Shotts. In the village are the extensive works of the Shotts Iron Company, who employ over 2,400 hands. There are places of worship for the Established church, Evangelical Unionists and Roman Catholics, and there is also a Board school. There is a station on the Caledonian line close to the village, which in 1881 had a population of 911, and in 1891, 873.

LINLITHGOWSHIRE,

OR WEST LOTHIAN, is a small county, of a very irregular figure, lying on the south shore of the Firth of Forth, having Edinburghshire on the east and south-east, Lanarkshire on the south-west, and Stirlingshire on the west. The Brieich and the Almond waters form the boundary line betwixt this county and that of Edinburgh, except Mid-Calder, where the latter intrudes more than a mile into Linlithgowshire. From east to west (that is, along the shore of the Forth), the county extends sixteen miles; along the south-eastern boundary (or from Queensferry to its most eastern point) it measures about twenty. It comprises an area of 120 square miles, or 76,806 acres, and in point of size ranks as the thirtieth, and in population as the eighteenth of Scotch counties.

EARLY HISTORY.—Much that is applicable to the antiquities of and historical events connected with this county has been already sufficiently detailed in the annals of Edinburghshire and the capital—the district having formed at an early period a portion of the province of Lothian possessed by the Anglo-Saxons; some few particulars, more distinctly referable to this county, may, however, be here added. The Gadenii tribe of British people being overrun by the Romans, the latter formed a firm but not permanent settlement in the shire; the subjugated nations of the world had snapped their fetters—they even menaced the extinction of the Roman name the legions were recalled to avert the catastrophe, and Britain was left exposed to the devastations of her more ferocious neighbours. During the residence of the Romans in West Lothian, which was the outermost part of their conquest in this direction, they gave a site to the wall which they built across the island. No part of Valentia was so well protected by forts: From the station at Crumond a Roman road proceeded westward, along the shore of the Forth to Carriden, where the wall terminated; and along the sea-shore were several posts, which, according to old historians, were strengthened by towers. In modern times a variety of urns, coins, and other relics of the Romans have been discovered in the shire. It is understood that after the departure of the Romans, and a good deal later, this part of Lothian became occupied by the Scoto-Irish and Northern adventurers in greater numbers than in that portion now called Edinburghshire.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The aggregate surface of Linlithgowshire is neither flat nor hilly. The most remarkable protuberances form a range running obliquely across the middle of the county. The central and western parts have the most hilly ground, while on the east and south the land is mostly level. The elevations are generally well clothed with verdure and ornamental woods; about one-third of the county is either woodland or old pasture, laid down with artificial grasses; and there are more than four-fifths of the shire enclosed. Until the year 1723, there was little improvement in the agriculture of the district. Soon after this period, John, Earl of Stair, introduced new and advantageous modes of husbandry, and commenced the cultivation of the cabbage, turnip, and carrot by the plough. The example of this nobleman was beneficially followed by Charles, first Earl of Hope'soun, but both dying, thirty years elapsed before agricultural spirit was again actively displayed. In more recent times, some practical farmers, possessing the advantages of skill and capital, have brought the cultivation of the shire to comparative perfection; and now this rich and lovely district participates in the general improvements of Southern Caledonia. With the exception of Cairnapple, in the parish of Torphichen, which rises about fifteen hundred feet above the level of the sea, the mountains of this district are not of great altitude, nor are they numerous—Binnie Craig and Cocklerue are the only other eminences that attract notice; they are respectively about five hundred feet high.

MINERALS AND MANUFACTURES.—Linlithgowshire contains a store of minerals of the most useful kind. Coal abounds throughout, limestone is equally prevalent, in some parts ironstone is also found in profusion, and the whole surface seems to rest on a bed of sandstone of the finest quality; silver and lead mines were formerly wrought, and there is plenty of marl, potters' clay, brick clay and red chalk. Many places present volcanic appearances, particularly at Dundas Hill, in the parish of Dalmeny, where there is a bold front of basaltic rocks, exhibiting in some instances columns of that character. This is the richest district in Scotland or the production of shale, from which paraffin oil is extracted, and for the manufacture of which very extensive works are in operation in the neighbourhood of Bathgate, Linlithgow, Uphall, and Whitburn. Besides this branch of trade, there are also large iron and steel foundries, paper mills, distilleries, chemical works, and brick, tile, and earthenware manufactories.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—The only river of consequence is the Almond, or Amond, but there are a number of considerable rivulets and burns, and the Forth yields advantages which amply compensate for the deficiency of river navigation. The Almond rises in the high grounds of Lanarkshire, and, pursuing a north-easterly course, falls into the sea at Crumond; at its mouth it assumes the appearance of a small loch or arm of the sea, running up the bottom of a woody ravine; but it is not navigable except for a very short distance, and that only for boats and very small sloops. The main line of RAILWAY that passes through this county is the Edinburgh and Glasgow section of the North British line. Bathgate and Uphall are communicated with by the Edinburgh and Bathgate branch line, Bo'ness by the Monkland section, Linlithgow by the Edinburgh and Glasgow section, Whitburn by the Morningside section—all from the main line. The completion of the Forth Bridge at Queensferry, connecting this county with Fifeshire by rail, has greatly benefited the commerce on which Linlithgowshire at present so much depends.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—This county was probably separated into the sheriffdom in the reign of David I: It was placed by Robert, however, under the administration of a constable, and so it continued until the time of James IV. No other district appears to have been so divided into petty baronies, halleries, regalities and other independent jurisdictions, nor so domineered over by a number of peers inimical to peace and regardless of justice. The oldest family in the shire is that of Dundas, who can trace an unbroken line of descent and residence on the same spot up to the reign of William the Lion (1165), an antiquity rarely to be found surpassed, not only in Scotland, but in any other country. Linlithgowshire comprises eleven parishes and two parts of parishes which with two in Midlothian and four in Stirlingshire, form one presbytery. It contains two royal burghs, namely, Linlithgow and Queensferry; the next largest town is Bathgate. Its seaport is Bo'ness, and there are a number of thriving villages. The lord lieutenant is the Earl of Rosebery. The burghs of Linlithgow, Hamilton, Lanark, Airdrie, and Falkirk, in conjunction, send one representative to the Imperial Parliament, and the shire at large another. The member at present sitting for the shire is Peter M'Lagan, Esq., of Pumpherston. The parliamentary constituency for 1891-92 was 7,042. According to the census returns for 1881, the county contained a population of 43,510 inhabitants, and by those for 1891, 52,783, showing an increase in ten years of 9,279. The valuation of the county for 1891-92 was (exclusive of railways and canals), £265,962, and of railways and canals, £56,923.

BATHGATE,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF ARMADALE, TORPHICHEN, BLACKRIDGE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BATHGATE is a market town, an independent burgh of barony, and a parish; situated on the middle road betwixt Edinburgh and Glasgow, 18 miles w. from the former, 24 E. from the latter, and 7 s. from Linlithgow. It is a station on the Bathgate branch of the Edinburgh and Glasgow and Monklands sections of the North British railway. Another line is completed to Airdrie, Bo'ness, &c., joining the North British line at Manuel. The town occupies a pleasant site, near the southern base of a great ridge of hills extending across the country, and sheltering the town on the north and east; while it has a fine southern exposure, and is seen at a considerable distance from that direction and from the west. These hills abound with limestone quarries, in which are found fine specimens of fossil remains. Visitors from America, &c., who a few years ago were geologising in the district, procured some rare specimens. Bathgate lays claim to high antiquity. Malcolm IV. granted to the monks of Holyrood the church at Bathkel, with the land belonging to it. At one period the town and its adjoining lands formed part of the ample possessions of King Robert Bruce, which, in 1306, he gave as a dowry to his daughter Marjory, on her marriage with Walter the great Stewart, and this marriage introduced the Stewart family to the throne of Scotland. The town, which is lighted with gas by a joint stock company, and abundantly supplied with water of an excellent quality by water works, costing £6,000, consists of a new and an old part, the former being well built. Few places of its size can show so much bustle and tidiness, and the town is considered to be very healthy. Bathgate was made a burgh of barony by Charles II. in 1661, and was created a free and independent burgh of barony by Act of Parliament in 1824, and placed under the control of a provost, three bailies, twelve councillors, a treasurer, a town clerk, and a procurator fiscal. It has now adopted Provost Lindsay's Police Act of 1862, and is governed by twelve commissioners. The sheriff holds small debt courts here once a quarter. Young's Paraffin Light & Mineral Oil Company, Limited, has extensive works in the vicinity of the town, and an iron foundry, two spade and shovel works, and a glass works are in the town, and a large distillery near to it. At Westfield, about two and a half miles distant, is the extensive mill of Messrs. James Stewart & Co. paper manufacturers, affording occupation for a large number of hands. The weaving of goods for the Glasgow manufacturers, which at one time employed many hands, is now carried on only to a very limited extent. On the north border of the parish, the silver mine workings were a few years ago re-opened. These were once greatly esteemed, and the precious metal smelted not far from the spot before being coined. James VI. took a great interest in the concern, although, history tells us, not so much to his profit. Mr. Henry Aitken (of the firm of Messrs. Russell and Son), the renowned coal master, obtained a lease of the mines from the Earl of Hopetoun, the proprietor, but after earnest research found them to be unprofitable.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free & United Presbyterian and Evangelical Union churches, and also a Roman Catholic chapel, all of which have a manse or residence for the minister. The old parish church, which was erected about 1737, having got into a bad state of repair, and been for some time inadequate for the accommodation of the increased number of inhabitants, was taken down in 1832, and a new building erected on the same site. It was built conjointly by assessment of the heritors of the parish and by voluntary subscriptions, and cost upwards of £8,000. The new church, which was opened in 1834, is a handsome edifice of stone, with hall and vestry adjoining, and for the greater part in the Norman style of architecture, a massive grandeur being given to the whole erection by a square tower, which rises from the south-west corner to a height of 108 feet, terminating in crocketed pinnacles at the corners. The tower carries a clock and bell, the magnificent gifts of John Waddell, Esq., of Inch, and ex-provost of the burgh of Bathgate, the estimated cost of which was over £250. The clock, which is placed at an elevation of 90 feet, has an illuminated dial, and is seen from a great distance in all directions. The interior of the church has a pleasing and comfortable appearance. The whole of the internal woodwork, with the exception of the pulpit, is of pitch pine. There is a gallery, which is carried continuously round three sides of the church, and the east gable is relieved by a circular apse, in which have been placed five memorial stained glass windows, very fine in design and colour, giving tone and richness to the light, and much enhancing the general effect of the interior. The total accommodation is about 1,100 sittings. The burgh boasts of a superior educational institution in the Bathgate Academy, endowed by the late John Newland, of Kingston, Jamaica, a native of this town. The sum bequeathed by this gentleman amounted, previous to the erection of this building, to between £16,000 and £17,000. The Academy stands on a commanding and healthy site in the immediate vicinity of the town, and is an elegant and extensive structure; it comprises seven large class-rooms, library-room, trustees' room, and janitor's house. The courses of education are conducted on the most approved system by a rector and a number of teachers. It is now under Government inspection, and is managed by trustees, one of whom represents the lord of the manor and another is appointed by the Commissioners. The youth of the parish have thus the benefit of first-rate instruction in all the useful and many of the more learned branches, while others, not parishioners, are admitted at the discretion of the trustees. The Bathgate Board School, which is situated near the Academy, has a handsome appearance, and is numerously attended. There are three bank branches, viz.: the National, the Royal and the Union Bank, and a Savings Bank. The market day is Tuesday, when a large supply of grain of all kinds is brought from the surrounding country. The buyers and sellers are accommodated in a building erected in Jarvey street, called the Corn Exchange, which also contains spacious rooms for courts and for other public meetings. The following eminent men were born in the parish—Dr. John Fleming, professor of natural science, Aberdeen; Dr. John Reid, professor of anatomy, St. Andrews; and the celebrated Sir James Simpson, Bart., whose reputation is European. The authorities of the burgh are entitled to hold (by Act of Parliament) seven annual fairs—namely, on the third Wednesdays in April, July and August, on the first Wednesdays after Whit-Sunday and Martinmas (O.S.), and the fourth Wednesdays in June and October; the Whitsuntide and Martinmas fairs are the principal, and are well attended by cattle dealers. The parish of Bathgate, which embraces an area of 10,876 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 9,450, and in 1891, 11,356 of which the town possessed 5,330.

ARMADALE is a village in the parish of and 2 miles w. from Bathgate, on the main road from Edinburgh to Glasgow. It is in a flourishing state, being situated amongst large fields of ironstone, gas coal, common coal, &c., and is well supplied with gas by a public company. It is a police burgh, with nine commissioners. The village takes its name from an estate long the property of Sir William Homeyman, a senator of the College of Justice, under the title of Lord Armadale. The places of worship in the village are a quoad sacra Established church, a Free church, an Episcopal church, and a Wesleyan Methodist chapel. A railway passing near to the village offers facilities for mineral traffic; and Armadale is a station on the Western section of the North British railway. Several thriving hamlets surround the village. The mining villages of DURHAMTOWN, POLKEMMER, and BATHVILLE are also situated in the parish. Population of Armadale in 1881, 2,642.

TORPHICHEN is a parish and village, the latter on the road from Bathgate to Linlithgow, 2½ miles N. by W. from Bathgate, and 4½ s.w. by s. from Linlithgow. It is a place of great antiquity, and was once of importance; but it has now an entirely rural character, and presents a straggling, yet pleasant, appearance. Adjacent to the village, on the north-east, are some remains of the hospital or preceptory of Torphichen, the principal Scottish residence of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem; of the church of the preceptory the chancel and the nave are entirely gone, and only the choir and the transept remain. The nave is traditionally reported to have been of great length; its site is now occupied by an edifice of a very different character, the plain modern parish church. There is also a Free church, said to be one of the first Free churches in Scotland. In the village is an excellent Board school, conducted by efficient teachers. The parish, although in some parts rather moorish, is generally fertile; coal and ironstone are found within it, and there are brick and tile works and a paper mill within its bounds. Acreage of the parish, 9,939. Population in 1881, 1,526, and in 1891, 1,724.

BLACKRIDGE is a small hamlet in the parish of Torphichen, about 5½ miles w. from Bathgate, on the Edinburgh and Glasgow road, seated in an agricultural district. A Free church is in the village, and a school near to it. Several coal fields have recently been opened out in the vicinity, giving increased employment to the inhabitants.

BORROWSTOUNNESS,

AND THE PARISH OF CARRIDEN, WITH THE VILLAGES OF GRANGE PANS, MUIRHOUSES, BRIDGENESS, BLACKNESS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS,

BORROWSTOUNNESS (or, as it is now generally pronounced Bo-ness) is an ancient seaport, burgh of barony and parish, bounded on the north by the Firth of Forth, on the south by the parish of Linlithgow, on the east by Carriden, and on the west by the river Avon, which separates it from Stirlingshire. Its length eastward is about four miles and its average breadth is about two. The town is 18 miles
w. from Edinburgh, 9 w. from Queensferry, 3½ n. from Linlithgow, 8 w.s.w. from Falkirk, and 5 s. from Grangemouth. It is situated on the south shore of the Firth of Forth, on a piece of low ground or nees, and consists principally of two streets, running eastward, terminating in one of nearly the same length, the greater portion of the houses forming which appear to be of very old date. Between 1750 and 1780 Bo'ness was one of the most thriving towns on the east coast, and ranked as the third port in Scotland; but when the junction of the Forth & Clyde was effected by means of the great canal, Grangemouth, situated at the east end of the canal, became the chief seat of commerce, and in 1810 was erected into a separate port, with a custom house. The trade of Bo'ness then greatly declined. The Harbour Commissioners, in 1875, to enable the port to compete with other ports on the Firth of Forth, took into consideration the necessity of improving and extending the harbour, so as to afford accommodation and facilities to the larger class of vessels which now carry on the trade of the country, and with this object in view obtained an Act of Parliament giving them ample powers, not only to extend the tidal harbour, but also to construct a wet dock. In 1876, under the provisions and powers of this Act of Parliament, they, in the first instance, constructed a new pier, and immediately after a wet dock, of 7½ acres in extent, at a cost of £200,000, which was finished towards the end of 1881, and since it was opened, in December of that year, it has been the means of drawing a large and steadily increasing trade to the port. In connection with the dock a considerable addition was made to the old harbour—the quays were rebuilt and the area extended from 2½ to 6½ acres, and the depth of water largely increased. The extent of the quays in the dock is 2,400 feet, and in the harbour 1,900 feet. The dock and relative works are of the most substantial character, and have been furnished throughout with hydraulic machinery of the most modern description, and the lines of railways on the quays are in direct communication with the lines of the North British Railway Company's system, thus affording access to and from all parts of the United Kingdom. The trade of the port consists chiefly of imports of timber, esparto grass, grain, iron ore, phosphate, &c., and the exports are coal, iron and general goods.
Direct steamers between here and London sail once a week. Ample standage for coal wagons, three miles in length, and worked by self-acting gradients, has been provided to facilitate in every possible way the quick shipment of cargo and bunker coal at the coal hoists.
The hydraulic appliances consist of three coal-shipping hoists, each capable of shipping 2,000 tons of coal per day of 24 hours, or 6,000 tons by all the hoists, six portable cranes, each capable of lifting two tons, three of which can at one time be applied to the discharge of the same vessel, capstans for hauling ships into and out of the dock, and wagon capstans for working the movable traffic on the quays of the dock, &c. Large sheds in which are fitted hydraulic cranes for lifting goods, are also provided for the storage of cargoes. The Monkland section of the North British railway terminates at the harbour. At KINNEIL, about half a mile westward, are extensive ironworks, including four blast furnaces for smelting the ore, with which, as well as that of coal, the Kinneil estate abounds; but the stagnation of the iron trade during the past few years has caused the furnaces to lie idle. Borrowstounness at one time was one of the chief places on the Forth for the manufacture of salt, but now that product is not so extensively made.

Amongst the chief industries of the place may be mentioned an extensive distillery, earthenware manufactories, chemical manure works, and several iron foundries. Branches of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and the Royal Bank of Scotland are established in the town. The Duke of Hamilton is superior of the burgh, the government being vested in a body of trustees. Kinneil House, one of the family seats of the Duke of Hamilton, is the most remarkable building in the parish. Here the celebrated Watt realised some of his earliest improvements upon the steam engine; and Professor Dugald Stewart was the last tenant. The barony of Kinneil is one of the most ancient possessions of the house of Hamilton. The Roman wall of Antonius, commonly called "Graham's Dyke," passes through the parish; and within a short distance of the town to the south-east the traces of a Roman camp are still visible.
The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, one for the United Presbyterians, and an Episcopal church.
A new Established church has lately been erected, towards which the Duke of Hamilton subscribed £4,000. There are several schools under the School Board. The village of BORROWSTOUN lies about a mile inland from Bo'ness. The parish of Bo'ness has an area of 3,146 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 6,088, and in 1891, 6,989, of which the town contained 4,579.

The parish of CARRIDEN is bounded by Bo'ness on the west, Abercorn on the east, and Linlithgow on the south; it lies on the south bank of the Forth, and is not more than two miles in length by one in breadth. The whole district is well enclosed and cultivated. This and the adjoining parish of Bo'ness were amongst the first localities in Scotland in which coal was found. At present mining operations in coal are carried on very extensively. The other branches of trade form part of what is given as regards Bo'ness.
Within the parish of Carriden, besides its own village, are those of GRANGE PANS, MUIRHOUSES, BRIDGENESS and BLACKNESS; the latter, which in former times, previous to the rise of Bo'ness, from local advantages was a harbour of considerable importance, was also celebrated for its castle, which, during the reign of James VI., was the principal state prison in Scotland, and as such received within its gloomy walls many distinguished persons; one of the most remarkable of its prisoners was Lord Ochiltree, who, for accusing the Marquis of Hamilton of aspiring to the Scottish crown, was here confined during nearly the whole reign of Charles I.—upwards of twenty years, and was not liberated until the country fell under the dominion of Cromwell.

Blackness Castle is one of the ancient fortresses whose preservation was guaranteed by the Act of Union. The edifice was converted to the purposes of a barrack in the course of a long-protracted war.
From the continued agitation of the city of Edinburgh, the Government some time ago altered, repaired, and fitted up this castle as a powder magazine or depot, with barracks attached for accommodating a company of soldiers in charge of the magazine, stores and premises. A small pier has also been erected for shipping and landing stores at the castle. The pier of Bridgeness affords good accommodation for small vessels employed in the exportation of coals, &c. At Grange, the residence of Henry M. Cadell, Esq., the proprietor, are extensive collieries. Within the parish of Carriden, and a mile east of Grange, is Carriden House. The only place of worship is the parish church. There is a public school and one for girls, with an infants' school at Grange Pans. Colonel Gardiner, was born at Burnfoot, in this parish. Acreage of the parish of Carriden, 2,705; population in 1881, 1,989, and in 1891, 2,453.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY,
 ON THE MONKLAND SECTION OF THE NORTH BRITISH LINE.
 Station, Bo'ness—Robert Wilson Dott, station master

LINLITHGOW,

MURAVONDSIDE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LINLITHGOW (popularly pronounced Lithgow) is an ancient royal burgh, the capital of the shire and parish of its name, and the seat of the presbytery of Linlithgow; 16 miles w. from Edinburgh, 31 E. by N. from Glasgow, 8 E. from Falkirk, and 3½ S. from Bo'ness; seated on the bank of a fine lake, and on the Edinburgh and Glasgow section of the North British railway, for which line a principal station is established here. It is chiefly formed of a single street, which runs east and west along the south edge of the water. Some of the houses in the town still possess the characteristic feature of the Scotch style of architecture, but many of the older specimens have within recent years been replaced by more modern tenements. The town however still possesses a variety of objects that cannot fail to interest the attentive traveller, and impress the mind with an idea of its ancient grandeur. Amongst these are the magnificent ruins of its royal palace, the venerable church adjoining, and the terraced promontory on which both edifices were erected. The palace is a quadrangular building, enclosing a spacious open court, and occupies the site of a Roman castle. The castle was razed and re-erected by Edward I. of England; and of this structure there still exists three round towers on the east side of the palace, and which have been used as abutments for supporting the massive east wall of the palace. The palace was a favourite hunting scene of the Stuart dynasty; and was enlarged and enriched by nearly all these princes. James IV. was particularly attached to his Linlithgow residence, and in the poem of "Marmion," Scott has vividly depicted the bustle and gaiety of the Court there. Mary Stuart, the lovely and unfortunate Queen of Scots, was born in a room on the west side of the palace, on December 8th, 1542; but there are few other noteworthy incidents connected with it. In the centre of the palace quadrangle may be seen the shattered remains of a beautiful fountain, exquisitely and elaborately carved by Italian artists, who were brought over by one of the Stuarts. A restoration of this fountain was made by the late Mr. Matheson of her Majesty's Board of Works, and it now adorns the west front of Holyrood House. This fountain was supplied with water from the estate of Preston, about a mile distant, and the pipes leading to it were discovered in digging a drain in the Carmelite Friars' lands on the south side of the town. The church is a beautiful example of later Gothic architecture. The nave and transept are richly carved and ornamented, but the choir and apse are of a more recent and inferior style. At the west end there is a massive square tower and belfry, which, till the beginning of the present century, was surmounted by a crown, something in the style of St. Giles's, Edinburgh. There is a fine peal of bells in the tower, one of them being dated as re-cast in 1468, and bearing an inscription that it had been named then, as formerly, "Meg Duncan." The Established church congregation worship in the choir, which is divided from the nave by an ornamented party wall. In the vestry are to be seen some interesting relics of the church; and in the south end of the transept (called St. Catherine's aisle) the Scotch nobles are said to have attempted, by means of a spectral apparition, to terrify James IV. from persisting in his invasion of England. Among the ancient dwellings a particular house used to be pointed out to strangers as the place from whence Hamilton of Bothwellhaugh shot the Regent Murray. A bronze tablet, with the effigy of the regent, has been inserted in the wall of the county-court room to denote the spot where the house stood. On the north side of the railway, a little to the west of the station, there stood an old house which formed part of a preceptory of the Knight Templars of Torphichen, and was used in the reign of James VI. as the Scottish mint. It was pulled down in 1886. The ancient Prætorium, or Town House, an elegant structure, erected in 1688, was partially destroyed by fire in 1847, but was immediately repaired. It contains a council chamber and sheriff court room, and a large hall, tastefully decorated, for public meetings. To the north of this stands the County Hall, which is handsome and convenient, and contains full length portraits of the late General John, fourth Earl of Hopetoun, of his brother, Sir Alexander Hope, both distinguished officers, and of the late Earl of Rosebery. The Victoria Hall is situated in High street (opposite the Commercial Bank of Scotland), and has a frontage of 56 feet, with a depth of ground from front to back of about 170 feet. It contains ante-rooms, cloak rooms, &c., and a hall capable of accommodating about 600 persons. The foundation stone was laid, with masonic honours, December 31st, 1887, by Peter M' Lagan, Esq., M.P., F.R.C.M. The style of architecture is Scottish baronial, with traces of French Gothic detail, from designs by Mr. J. Innes Walker, of Edinburgh. The total cost was about £4,000. Linlithgow is one of the oldest royal burghs in Scotland. The Town Council is fifteen in number, and the magistrates elected from the Council are a provost and three bailies. The burgh unites with Lanark, Hamilton, Airdrie and Falkirk in sending one member to Parliament, the present representative being Harry Smith, Esq.

The county a few years ago erected a spacious court house, on the south side of the street, a little to the west of the Cross Well. The building contains offices for the sheriff, sheriff's clerk, procurator fiscal, and chief constable; besides a spacious court room, small court room, witness and jury rooms, and a hall for the procurators of court. A court is held every Wednesday for criminal cases, and on Friday for civil and small debt cases. Immediately opposite to the Town House is a fountain, completed on the 4th of June, 1807, in imitation of the ancient Cross Well. It is of hexagonal form, ascended by steps, the water descending from the top of the fountain, which is surmounted by a unicorn holding a shield. The stream falls into a basin, from whence it is spouted into a larger one through the mouths of six grotesque figures, whence it again issues through the jaws of other heads into a still more capacious receptacle, which is surrounded by statues in male and female ancient costumes; here all the streams are concentrated, and find egress in a copious gush, from which the inhabitants are supplied with water. This work is said to have been all hewn by a one-handed mason, and to be a very poor imitation of the original structure. This architectural curiosity is surrounded by iron palisades of light and elegant workman-ship. Several other fountains of similar formation are to be seen in the town. The Combination Poor House at St. Magdalene's on rising ground, about a quarter of a mile from the town, was erected in 1854, and is a neat and commodious building, including several lunatic wards. The cost of the erection was £9,000, defrayed by the following parishes in proportion according to the number of shares which each has in the establishment. Linlithgow is the largest contributor, and others in the following order: Borrowstounness, Bathgate, Whitburn, Carriiden, Kirkliston, Muiravonside, and Abercorn. Paper-making, tanning, currying, and boot making may be taken as the staples of trade. In the tanning and currying branches are several large establishments, the principal of which belongs to Messrs. T. Nimmo & Co. There are also close to the town a distillery, soap works, and two paper mills, belonging respectively to Messrs. Thomas Chalmers & Sons and Messrs. J. Lovell & Son. The Union canal passes close by the town, an extensive basin of excellent masonry affording commodious accommodation to vessels trading on it; and a beautiful aqueduct, unsurpassed in the United Kingdom, conducts its water on twelve arches over the river Avon and a deep and extensive valley. The railway before mentioned passes along the south side of the main street. Near to the bridge, about a mile to the west, the line is carried over the Avon by means of a viaduct of 19 arches of substantial masonry.

The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, two United Presbyterian churches, one for Independents and one for Roman Catholics. There are two Board and a Roman Catholic school. A weekly market for grain is held on Friday, and there are fairs on the Friday after the second Tuesday in January, February 25th, the third Friday in April, the second Tuesday in June, August 2nd, and the first Friday in November. In 1881 Linlithgow contained a population of 8,913, and in 1891, 8,917.

MURAVONDSIDE is a parish in the county of Stirling, about 2 miles w. from Linlithgow, its post town, and about 4 S.E. from Falkirk. It is situate on the left bank of the Avon, which river is here rendered of great service in propelling the works of a number of mills on its banks. The parish, which is six miles in length by two in breadth, is bounded by the parishes of Bo'ness, Linlithgow, Torphichen, Polmont and Siamannan. The land is nearly all arable and enclosed, and beneath the surface there is an abundance of coal. At Causewayend are the works of the Linlithgow Foundry Company, iron-founders. In the parish are an Established church and three public schools. MADDISTON is a village in this parish. The parish of Muiravonside covers an area of 7,969 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 2,713, and in 1891, 3,669.

WINCHBURGH is a small village, with a station on the North British line, in the parish of Kirkliston, 2½ miles w. therefrom, and 5½ E. from Linlithgow. There is a public school close to the station.

QUEENSFERRY, WITH DALMENY AND ABERCORN.

QUEENSFERRY, or, as it is sometimes called, "SOUTH QUEENSFERRY" (in contradistinction to North Queensferry, a harbour of Fife-shire), is a royal burgh and parish, the latter being confined with in the limits of the former. It is 9 miles w. from Edinburgh, the same distance, from Bo'ness, and 6 miles s.e. from Ratho, situated between the shore of the Firth of Forth and the ridge that rises from the coast. There is an excellent and safe harbour here, which can be entered at any time according to the tide. Queensferry is a place of considerable antiquity, having received its name from the Queen of Malcolm Canmore (Margaret), who usually made choice of the ferry at this place for the passage of the Firth. Under her auspices the town increased in size, population, and commerce, but in the present day it is not conspicuous for either. Some little consequence belongs to it from the ferry at Newhall (a little to the eastward of the town) over the Forth. There is another pier a short distance to the westward, for the convenience of boats when they cannot make the former point; they are both handsome slips or piers, and run a considerable distance into the water. At this place the Firth is contracted to a gut of two miles in width; and in the middle of the strait lies a small rocky island called INCHGARVIE. The Forth Bridge, which here spans the river, is one of the greatest triumphs yet achieved by engineering science. The undertaking was promoted by four railway companies with the object of providing a safe and speedy through-route to and from the North. The bridge has a total length from end to end of 2,700 yards, the portion between high-water mark on the two sides of the Firth being 1,900 yards. Beginning at the Queensferry side, the bridge is carried out 1,760 feet on a series of nine piers of solid masonry, faced with blocks of Aberdeen grey granite. Each of these piers is 130 feet above high-water mark, and the span between them is 160 feet. The tenth pier from the shore is what is called the cantilever tower, the basement or cut-water of which is 103 feet in length and 52 feet thick, and upon it rests not only the end of the girders but the end of the shoreward arm of the south cantilever. The carrying of the railway over the Forth, the free navigation of the channel for the largest ships having to be conserved, is accomplished by the cantilever principle, which means that from three sets of granite piers arranged in groups of four columns each—the centre set at Inchgarvie, and the others about 1,600 feet on each side—a huge superstructure of steel is reared supporting gigantic bracket-like arms, two of which, with a separate girder in the centre, forms an apparent arch with a span of 1,700 feet, and with a height above high water level of 150 feet. There are two such spans in the bridge, and two half-spans of 680 feet each, one thrown shoreward to the cantilever tower on the South Queensferry side, whilst the other rests upon a corresponding tower on the opposite shore. Foundations for the piers were obtained by sinking enormous iron and steel caissons, 70 feet in diameter, to the solid rock. The material used in the building of the bridge is the strongest known, being granite for the foundation and steel for the superstructure. The space at our disposal will not admit of a more detailed description of this gigantic undertaking, and the few facts given above are extracted from an able article which appeared in the Scotsman newspaper. The bridge was tested on January 21st, 1890, and three days later the first train passed over, being piloted during part of the journey by Lady Tweeddale. It was burdened with a load of 1,800 tons, being more than double the weight it will at any time have to bear. About half a mile to the westward, is Port Edgar, so named from Prince Edgar having landed there. From this place George IV. when on a visit to Scotland, embarked on his return to England. As a royal burgh Queensferry is governed by a provost, two bailies, and a town council. The burgh unites with Stirling, Culross, Inverkeithing, and Dunfermline in returning one member to Parliament, the present representative being the Right Hon. Henry Campbell-Bannerman. The Right Hon. the Earl of Rosebery conveyed water into the town for the use of the inhabitants, but the supply is now obtained from Mid-Caldor. The magistrates and council, to evince their gratitude for these favours, raised a tablet, with an appropriate inscription over the fount. A handsome clock has been erected in the centre of the village, by public subscription, at a cost of over £200, in commemoration of her Majesty's jubilee. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, one for the Presbyterians, an Episcopal church, and a Roman Catholic chapel. A training ship for about 700 boys is now stationed here. A fair is held on the second Friday in August. The population of Queensferry, including Dalmeny, was in 1881, 1,963, and in 1891, 1,531.

DALMENY is a parish and small village, in the north-east of Linlithgowshire; the parish consists of a main body and a detached district; the main body surrounds Queensferry, and contains some of that town's outskirts on the east and west. Its length from east to west is 5½ miles, and its breadth 3½ miles. Nearly the whole of the parish is well cultivated and enclosed, and contains several mansions, amongst which are Lord Rosebery's, Craigie Hall, Dundas Castle, &c. The village, which is about a mile from Queensferry, contains the parish church and a public school; the former is of great antiquity, built in the mixed Greek and Gothic style of architecture. The small hamlet of CRAIGIE is in the parish, which has an area of 5,991 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 1,660, and in 1891, 1,531.

NEWTON is a small village in the parish of Abercorn, postal district of Winchburgh, situated about 2½ miles from Queensferry. The inhabitants are principally engaged in agriculture.

UPHALL, WITH BROXBURN,

ECCLESMACHAN, DECHMONT, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

UPHALL is a parish and village, the latter situated on the main road between Glasgow and Edinburgh, 11 miles w. from the latter city, and about 5½ n.e. from Bathgate. The extreme length of the parish is 4 miles, with a breadth of 3; and it is bounded by Kirkcaldy on the north-east and east, by Mid-Caldy on the south, Livingstone on the west, and Linlithgow and Ecclesmachan on the north. It is intersected from west to east by the road from Glasgow to Edinburgh, and is watered by a rivulet called Broxburn, on which, and the public road, stands the village of that name. Shale, which is now so largely used in the manufacture of paraffin oil, of which there are three extensive works in the locality, is found in abundance in the neighbourhood, and is said to be of a very rich quality; bone manures are also manufactured in the parish. The district abounds in coal, sandstone, limestone and ironstone. The parish is chiefly of an upland character, but it is under the best system of agriculture and enclosure. In the village of Uphall there are an Established church and a Board school. In the chancel of the church are deposited the remains of the Hon. Henry Erskine, and also those of the late Lord Chancellor Erskine. There is a station on the North British railway, about a mile from the village. The parish of Uphall comprises 4,541 acres, and had in 1881 a population of 4,812, and in 1891, 8,610.

BROXBURN, the most populous village in the parish of Uphall, owes its prosperity and growth to the extensive works of the Broxburn Oil Company, Limited, which are situated in the vicinity of the village, and furnish employment to the greater part of the inhabitants. It is 1 mile east from the village of Uphall, 10 w. from Edinburgh, and 7 s.e. from Linlithgow. The western extremity of the village is crossed by the Union Canal from Edinburgh. The places of worship are Established, Free, and United Presbyterian churches, and a Roman Catholic chapel. There is also a Board school and one for Roman Catholics; and a branch of the British Linen Company Bank is established here. Altogether Broxburn is in a prosperous condition. During the past few years the population has very much increased, and at the present time it is estimated to be about 6,000 persons. Drumsheolund station on the North British railway is about a mile from the village.

The small parish of ECCLESMACHAN lies south of Abercorn and east of Linlithgow, about 5 miles s.e. from the latter town, and a mile and a half n. from Uphall; it is 4 miles in length and 1 in breadth, and is watered by a tributary of the Almond. Near the church is a weak sulphurous spring, called the Bullion Well. There are a church of the Establishment and a public school in the parish, which is a flat corn country, altogether under cultivation, and based on freestone. Acreage of the parish, 2,617; population in 1881, 278, and in 1891, 342.

DECHMONT is a small village in the the parish of Livingstone, and about a mile and a quarter w. from Uphall, its post town; situate on the road from Edinburgh to Glasgow.

WHITBURN,

FAULDHUSE, CROFTHHEAD, LONGRIDGE, BLACKBURN, AND LIVINGSTONE.

WHITBURN, or WHITEBURN, is a parish and village, the latter 21 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 10 s. from Linlithgow, and 4 s.w. from Bathgate; situated on the south road from Edinburgh to Glasgow, and on the Bathgate and Morningside branch railway, on which line the company have a station at EAST WHITEBURN, about a mile distant. It is a regularly built place, and is supported by the coal and iron mines with which the parish abounds, and a little weaving of cotton goods for the Glasgow houses. It contains a public coffee-house and reading-room, the gift of Lady Baillie, and handsome schools, the latter built by the trustees of the late Mr. Wilson, who bequeathed a considerable part of his property for the laudable purpose of erecting and supporting charity schools in the district. These schools have since been purchased by the School Board, and the trustees now devote the endowments for the purpose of encouraging higher education in the parish by means of scholarships and bursaries. Within the parish are the villages and hamlets of EAST WHITEBURN, LONGRIDGE, CROFTHHEAD, GREENBURN, FAULDHUSE, DRYBRIDGE, and BENHAR. The places of worship are the Established church and a Free church. The parish is watered by the Almond, the Breich, and two small rivulets. There is much moss and pasture land in the upper portion; in the lower division, on the contrary, the surface is arable, and admirable planted and enclosed. Acreage of the parish, 9,775; population in 1881, 6,826, and in 1891, 5,782.

BLACKBURN is a small village in the parish of and about 4 miles w. from Livingstone, 3 s. from Bathgate, and 2 e. from Whitburn, sited on the bank of the Almond. Adjacent to the village are lead stone quarries. The stone is used in the construction of ovens, being capable of bearing any amount of heat, but it is useless for building purposes. There are also works for the manufacture of millboard. There is a Board school in the village, and a chapel of ease. Population in 1881, 790.

FAULDHUSE is a village about 3½ miles s.w. from and in the parish of Whitburn. It is a quoad sacra parish, a post town, and station on the main line of the Caledonian railway between Glasgow and Edinburgh. It contains a population of 3,469, the greater portion of which find employment in the coal and ironstone mines which abound in the neighbourhood. The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church, and one for Roman Catholics. There is a station at Crofthead on the Morningside section of the North British railway, which passes close to the village.

LIVINGSTONE is a parish and village—the former stretching from 5 to 6 miles along the north bank of the Breich water, which separates the county from Edinburghshire, and has a breadth of from 3 to 4 miles. The village, which is not large, is 6 miles E. from Whitburn and 4 E. from Blackburn, situated on the banks of the Almond water, and on one of the roads from Edinburgh to Glasgow. The parish church is situated at the west end of the village, and the other place of worship is a Free church, erected in 1858, with a manse. There is also in the village a Board school, and in the parish are the paraffin oil works of the Pumphreston Oil Company, Limited. The railway station is a mile and a half from the village. Acreage of the parish, 5,362; population in 1881, 1,484, and in 1891, 1,616.

LONGRIDGE is a small village about 2 miles s. from Whitburn. There are a United Presbyterian church and a Board school in the village.

NAIRNSHIRE.

THIS is a small maritime county in the north-eastern part of Scotland, once forming a portion of the ancient province of Moray. It is bounded on the north by the Moray Firth, on the east by the shire of Elgin (or Moray), and on the south and west by the county of Inverness. It extends from the coast, on the north, to the small lake of Lochindorb (situate at its extreme southern apex) on the south, twenty miles; the breadth along the shore is twelve miles, and its sides vary from twelve to twenty-two miles asunder. The shire comprises 178 square miles, or 114,400 acres. In size this county ranks as the twenty-ninth, but as regards population it is, with one exception (Kinross), the smallest in Scotland.

SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The agricultural properties of Nairnshire assimilate so closely with those of the county of Elgin, that but brief notice of its wealth and capabilities in this respect is here necessary. Exclusive of the hilly part of the district, it may be described as a narrow border of level ground, along the shore, from one to nearly six miles in breadth—and here for the most part it is arable; but as the county recedes further from the coast, it becomes bleak and hilly; there are, however, no eminences of great altitude or note in the whole county. The farms are usually small, and most frequently unenclosed. Sheep and black cattle are reared in considerable numbers, and chiefly fed on the natural pasturage. The county is crossed in its southern or hilly part by the river Findhorn, which runs in a direction from south-west to north-east; parallel with this rapid stream, about eight or nine miles to the west, courses the river Nairn, which also runs into the Moray Firth. Besides the rivers there are several small brooks, the banks of which are covered with woods and plantations; and there are some elegant seats scattered over the county. The shire is entirely devoid of manufactures; but the fisheries—white, herring and salmon—are tolerably productive.

RAILWAY.—The only railway which passes through this county is the Highland Railway, on which line Nairn is a station.

Small as this shire is, it possesses a distinct political and judicial establishment. It comprises three complete parochial divisions, with seven parts of parishes, and contains one royal burgh, NAIRN, which is the only town. This burgh, in conjunction with Inverness, Fortrose and Forres, sends one member to Parliament; and the county unites with Elginshire in returning another representative; the present member for the joint counties being John Seymour Keay, Esq. The parliamentary constituency in 1891-92 numbered 828. The Lord-Lieutenant of the county is Major James Rose, of Kilravock. According to the census returns for 1881 Nairnshire contained a population of 10,451, and by those for 1891, 10,019, showing a decrease during the last decade of 432. The valuation of the county for 1891-92 was (including valuation of railway, £1,575) £36,080.

NAIRN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ARDCLACH AND AULDEARN, AND THE VILLAGE OF CAWDOR.

NAIRN is a royal burgh of considerable antiquity, having been recognised by William the Lion. It is supposed that the town derives its name from the river Nearn, in Gaelic meaning alders—the river, or water, being understood. The original charter of the burgh is not extant. It was granted by Alexander I. in the year 1100, and was renewed by King James VI.—the gentle King Jamie. It is stated of this monarch that he boasted of having a town in Scotland, the burgh of Nairn, which was so long that the inhabitants of the one end could not understand the language spoken at the other end. There was truth in this so far, at least, that till this century the border of the Highlands seemed to intersect the town about Rose street, and the Highlanders naturally clung together and loved to congregate at that end of the town: It is distant by rail from Edinburgh, 185 miles N.W.; from Aberdeen, 93½ N.W.; from Perth, by the Inverness and Perth Junction Railway, 123½ N.; from Forres, 9½ S.W.; and from Inverness, 15½ N. There is a harbour here, with breakwater and pier. Approaching the town from the west is seen the Nairn Hospital, a handsome building erected by subscription in 1846. Near the centre of High street is a spacious structure erected about 1818, containing a town and county court room. For a seaport town Nairn enjoys certain advantages obtained from a fertile country yielding various articles proper for exportation. The exports consist of timber, corn, potatoes, eggs, smoked haddocks, herrings, and freestone. The imports are groceries, hardware, lime, manures, and coal. Four branch banking establishments are settled here, and also a savings bank. The white fishery is carried on successfully, and salmon fishing is also prosecuted. About four miles distant is the celebrated Royal Brackla Distillery, a very extensive establishment. The Highland railway facilitates intercourse with the surrounding country and the transit of goods and produce. The freestone quarries in the neighbourhood give employment to a number of men. The burgh unites with Inverness, Fortrose and Forres in returning one member to Parliament. The present member is Gilbert Beith, Esq., Q.C., of Newton. A sheriff court and a small debt court are held weekly. Nairn has been considerably improved of late years, being much resorted to in summer; its beach is inviting, and in the neighbourhood is some fine scenery and many agreeable residences. Some years ago new baths were erected by a public company, at a cost of about £15,000, the floors of which are formed of the solid rock, with a graduated depth of water. The bathing facilities in Nairn altogether are unrivalled by any town in Scotland, and the special characteristics of the place are those of a fashionable watering resort. A Public Hall has been erected at a cost of about £12,000, which will accommodate 800 persons. It is situated in the High street, and is much used for public entertainments.

The places of worship are the Parish, Free, and United Presbyterian churches, and a chapel each for English and Scotch Episcopalians, Independents, and Roman Catholics. One of the finest buildings in the town is the New Free church, which was opened for public worship on 1st January, 1862. It is situated opposite the Strath monument, and is exposed on three sides, its elevations being of a very striking character. It is built in the early French style, and the modified Gothic is very effectually carried out both on the exterior and interior. A very handsome spire surmounts the building, a clock and bell being placed in the lower base of the tower. It is seated for 1,200 persons. There is an excellent museum, containing a valuable cabinet of minerals. At the western extremity of the town, adjoining what was formerly the parish school, a neat monument was erected some years since to Mr. John Strath, who was forty years schoolmaster. Fairs: Cattle, horse and general markets are held here once a month, on the Saturday following Muir of Ord market; corn markets on Thursday weekly; fairs: cattle, Thursdays preceding 26th May and 22nd November. The population of the parish was in 1881 5,368, and in 1891 5,223, the burgh containing 4,014 of this number.

ARDCLACH is a Highland parish, in the south-east of the county, and is in general mountainous, covered with heath, and abounding in tracts of bleak and barren moss. It contains no village worthy of the name, and till within the last few years consisted of small crofters, with their plots of land, reclaimed from the surrounding wilds; but of late great improvements in agriculture have taken place, every year increasing the arable acreage of this parish. The river Findhorn traverses the parish, and the scenery along its banks is of the most varied and interesting description. There is a considerable quantity of timber along the banks of the river. The parish church, which is 9 miles S.E. from Nairn, and a Free church are the places of worship. Dava is the nearest railway station, 6 miles distant. Population in 1881, 1,117, and in 1891, 991.

AULDEARN, anciently called Erin, is a parish and village; the latter, a burgh of barony, is situated 2½ miles S.E. from Nairn, which is its nearest railway station. In the immediate neighbourhood of the village is the scene of a victory gained by the Marquis of Montrose over the forces of the Covenanters. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, and a United Presbyterian church at Moyness are the places of worship. The parish comprises an area of 14,035 statute acres, and in 1881 possessed a population numbering 1,292, and in 1891, 1,915.

About 5 miles S.W. from Nairn is the interesting and picturesque village of CAWDOR, in the parish of the same name, where, upon the banks of the burn of its name, is an excellent inn, frequented by tourists and families, who visit this spot to contemplate the charming scenery around and the towers of the ancient castle—the seat of the Thanes of Cawdor. The castle is occupied in the shooting season by the Earl of Cawdor. The stranger is granted access to this interesting structure (on applying at the inn for tickets of admission), where are vaulted chambers, spiral staircases, and tapestried rooms. From the summit of the castle is commanded one of the most extensive and lovely views in the county; and many parties of the gay and the fashionable appreciate by their presence in the summer and autumn the various beauties of this favoured locality. The nearest railway station is at Nairn. The parish of Cawdor, a portion of which is in the adjoining county of Inverness, contained in 1881, a population of 1,070, and in 1891, 1,026.

ORKNEY & SHETLAND ISLES.

THE ORKNEY ISLES,

KNOWN to the ancients by the name of Orcaades, are situated in the Northern Sea, separated from Caithness-shire, in Scotland, by the Pentland Firth, and lying between the parallels of 58 deg. 41 min. and 59 deg. 25 min. north latitude, and 23 deg. 30 min. west longitude; from the coast of Scotland they are distant four leagues, and from the Shetland Isles about fifteen. The form of the islands is extremely irregular; and from these circumstances, the dimensions of some of them are ascertained with difficulty. They are separated from one another by portions of water denominated "sounds," "firths," or "faries," some of which are only a mile broad, whilst others are more than five. Though thus closely connected, the whole of them are of considerable extent, for from the south-west to the north-east the distance is not less than seventy miles, and they are upwards of forty in another direction.

NAME, EARLY HISTORY, &c.—The earliest inhabitants appear to have been Celtic, who, at an unknown period before the Christian era established themselves in Scotland. Diodorus Siculus mentions Cape Orkas as one of the extremities of Britain; and the Orcaades are first named in the second century by Pomponius Mela, who states their number at thirty; Pliny augments them to forty; but Ptolemy makes them only thirty. Tacitus asserts that the Orcaades were discovered and subdued by Agricola, which seems to be corroborated by discoveries in the Orkneys of Roman coins belonging to the first century. The origin of the name is believed to be Celtic, and is probably derived from Orkin, a large marine animal—a term that has been applied to both whales and seals. Orkney therefore appears to mean "the land of whales," or of "seals." The Orcaades seem to have been esteemed of some importance in the time of Constantine, as they are especially mentioned, with Gaul and Britain, as the patrimony of his youngest son. Little is known of the Orcaades from that time until the convulsions in Norway, which ended in the elevation of Harold, "the Fair-Haired," to the undivided sovereignty of that country. About the middle of the ninth century Kenneth Macalpiu obtained possession of the islands, and they continued with the Scottish throne until the end of the eleventh century, when they were assigned by King Donald Bain to the King of Norway, to whom they were subject until the middle of the thirteenth century, when they were again transferred by Magnus, King of Norway, to Alexander, King of Scotland. But, although the islands were thus ceded, the Norwegians still asserted their right to them until the year 1468, when James III. of Scotland married Margaret, daughter of the King of Denmark, with whom they again passed, in lieu of her dowry, to the Crown of Scotland; and upon the birth of her son, James IV., they were finally ceded, which cession was confirmed when James IV. of Scotland married Ann, daughter of the King of Denmark. From the middle of the sixteenth to the beginning of the seventeenth century the islands were possessed successively by Earls Robert and Patrick Stewart—Robert being a natural son of James V. and half-brother to Queen Mary. Subsequent to this period the islands passed into the possession of the English Crown, and were bestowed by Charles I. and afterwards by Charles II., on the Morton family. In 1776 Lord Morton sold them to Sir Lawrence Dundas, and they have since remained in the family of his descendants. Having been so long and so repeatedly in the possession of the Norwegians, many names of persons, as well as of places, are derived from the Scandinavian language. It will be comprehended that the Orcaadians bear no resemblance whatever to the Celtic Highlanders in language, dress, appearance, or customs. The inhabitants may be divided into three classes; the first consists of the gentry, or proprietors of land, with such as have gained a competent fortune by means of industry; the second is formed of those who are denominated tradesmen and shopkeepers; and the third comprises fishermen, and others for the most part employed in the cultivation of the soil, and either farmers with servants, or what are termed cottagers. Orkney has given birth to some individuals who have attained to eminence in science, literature, and the arts. Of these we may mention Malcolm Laing, author of a well-known "History of Scotland," Mrs. Bruntton, authoress of "Self-Control," Samuel Laing, author of a "Tour in Norway;" his son, Samuel Laing, late Finance Minister of India; the late Dr. Baikie, the African traveller; Dr. Rae, the Arctic traveller; Thomas Stewart Traill, an eminent professor of medical jurisprudence in the University of Edinburgh; and Murdoch McKenzie, author of a "Survey of the Orkney and Lewis Islands." The grandfather of Washington Irving, the celebrated American writer, was born in the island of Shapinsay, and the eminent engraver of the last century, Sir Robert Straug, was born in Kirkwall.

SOIL, PRODUCE, CLIMATE, &c.—Compared with the sterile wilds in some of the sister islands to the north, or even with the lofty hills and bleak marshy plains to the south, these islands gain so much that their appearance is favourable and inviting; to the eye their surface presents a rich and pleasing variety. It is conjectured by some (and there are circumstances which strongly tend to corroborate this) that these islands were, at some distant period, part of the mainland of Scotland. The hills composing the ridge that skirts the Western Ocean, as well as those that intersect the mainland, and occupy some of the other islands, are seldom single and detached, but for the most part formed into ridges of some extent, with small intervening valleys; and their tops, instead of rising high into a conical form, are generally either flat or rounded. Some few of them are almost entirely covered with verdure; the bottoms of many consist of cornfields, interspersed with patches of rich old grass, affording excellent feeding for cattle; the soil is sandy or clay loam. There are spots on some of them delightfully romantic, where the attention is arrested and the ear pleased by the murmurs of the rills, and the eye feasted on flowers that shed their fragrance around. But what is of much more consequence, Providence, ever bountiful in adding to the comforts of man, has, with no sparing hand, spread peat moss over a considerable portion of these islands. The ancient rude modes of cultivation are now abandoned, and the implements of husbandry have been materially improved. But much of the land under tillage is not regularly fenced, nor divided into separate fields. The spirit of improvement is now, however, generally diffused throughout the islands, and regular enclosures are becoming more frequent. The crops principally cultivated are oats, bere, barley, potatoes and turnips. Wheat has also been grown, but only with moderate success. Great numbers of cattle and sheep are raised, for the pasture of which this country is peculiarly well suited. The herring fishery is considerable; the principal "stations" are Papa-Stronsay, Deersound, Holm, Burray and South Ronaldsay. The markets are Ireland, Scotland, and England, a few only being sent abroad from Orkney, except the produce of the early fishery, which is carried on in the neighbourhood of Stromness, and from that place the herrings are despatched direct to Hamburg. The cod and ling fisheries are also prosecuted by various descriptions of craft from almost all the islands. In the curing of the fish many persons are engaged. Lobster catching, though not so productive as formerly, is still pursued with fair success, as is also oyster dredging, which together give employment to many hands. The manufacture of kelp was at one time the staple of Orkney, but in consequence of the reduction of the duty on barilla, this trade suddenly collapsed, but latterly has shown signs of reviving, as it is now used in the making of iodine and other chemical substances. The distillation of whisky has long been established, there being two distilleries, one near Kirkwall and another at Stromness. Throughout the whole of the islands rain falls in considerable quantity, especially on the western coasts; and it is supposed that the annual amount showered upon these islands averages 36.35 inches. Snows are neither so frequent nor so heavy, but they come with comparative violence, and generally from the north-west and south-east; but though what falls in the course of the year may not be much short of the quantity in other northern latitudes, it continues only a few days at a time on the surface of the earth. A peculiarity of the climate with respect to the season of snow and hail merits some attention. Some part of the month of June, which in Britain is well known to be of a pleasant and genial warmth, is here not only colder than the preceding months, but also as much so as any month of winter; for two weeks, and even sometimes more, about the middle of June, the wind blows from the north, strong and piercing, accompanied with snow and hail showers.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—According to a survey taken by Dr. Murdo Mackenzie in 1750, the whole number of the islands under the denomination of the Orkneys amounted to sixty-seven, of which the following twenty-nine only are inhabited:—Mainland (or Pomona), Grimsay, Hoy, Waas, Raasay, Faray, Cayay, Flotay, South Ronaldsay, Swaney, Pentland, Skerry, Burray, Lambholm, Copinsey, Shapinsay, Stronsay, Papa-Stronsay, Edey, Fairrey, Sandey, North Ronaldsay, Westray, Papa-Westray, Egilsay, Ronsey, Weir, Enbalow, Gairsay, and Damsay; the remaining thirty-eight, which, in the primitive language of the country, are termed "holms," are much inferior in size, and solely appropriated to pasturage. The Orkneys comprise twenty-six parishes; the only two towns are Kirkwall, which is the capital and a royal burgh, and Stromness, a burgh of barony. The isles of Orkney and Shetland form one sheriffdom or stewardry, under a sheriff depute, whose authority extends over all; but he has a substitute resident in Orkney, and another in Shetland, by whom the duties are principally performed. Combined they form one county, under the title of the county of Orkney and Shetland, which returns one member to the Imperial Parliament. Kirkwall, the capital of the Orkneys, is a representative burgh, joining with Wick, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain, and Cromarty in sending another member. The county is represented by Leonard Lyell, Esq.; and the burghs by Sir John Pender, K.C.M.G. The parliamentary constituency of the county in 1891-92, was 8,898. The Lord-Lieutenant is Malcolm Laing, jun. Esq. The aggregate area of the Orkney Isles is 375 square miles, or 240,476 acres. In 1881 the population was returned as 32,044, and in 1891, 30,458, showing a decrease in the ten years of 1,606. The valuation of the county (exclusive of the royal burgh) for 1891-92 was 264,747.

KIRKWALL,

WITH THE PARISHES OF BIRSAY, DEERNES, EVIE, FIRTH, HARRAY, HOLM, ORPHIR, ST. ANDREWS AND ST. OLA, BURRAY, SOUTH RONALDSHAY, AND THE NORTH ISLES.

KIRKWALL, the capital of the Orkney Islands and of the united parishes of Kirkwall and St. Ola, is a town of great antiquity, a royal burgh, and the seat of a synod and prosbytery. It is 353 miles from Edinburgh by land and ferry, but considerably less by water; 56 N. from Wick, 54 N. by E. from Thurso, 41 N. from Huna Ferry (the most northerly part of Great Britain), and 11½ E. from Stromness, situate about the centre of an island, called by way of pre-eminence, Mainland, or Pomona, and on the south-east of the bay of Kirkwall. The town bears strong characteristics of antiquity; the principal street is exceedingly narrow, being in some places barely wide enough to afford passage for a cart; the houses are generally arranged with their gables towards the street, which gives the town a singular appearance. Many of these houses, both externally and internally, present striking features of old age—the doors and windows are small, the walls of great thickness, and the apartments narrow and gloomy. The modern dwellings, however, form an exception to this style, and many of them vie with the most commodious habitations of any other place of the same extent in Scotland. New municipal buildings have been erected, the foundation-stone having been laid by the late Earl of Mar and Kellie, on August 20th, 1884. They are three storeys in height, and are built in the Scottish baronial style of architecture, the principal entrance being emphasised by a fine semi-classic door-piece, surmounted by two statues of the ancient halberdiers of the burgh in full uniform. The accommodation on the ground floor comprises telegraph office, office of burgh surveyor and town clerk, and three other suites of offices. On the first floor, at the back, is the Town Hall, the front being occupied as town council chamber, immediately behind which, and between it and the Town Hall, is situated a room for the Commissioners of Supply.

The most conspicuous building in Kirkwall is the Cathedral of St. Magnus. It was founded by Ronald, Earl of Orkney, 1198, in honour of and dedicated to his uncle, St. Magnus, and though the work of different ages, and brought to completion under various superintendence, must be admitted to be an edifice not only grand and simple, but also surprisingly regular and uniform, and is a most imposing ornamental object of pride to these northern islands. A short distance from the cathedral is a large and handsome church belonging to the United Presbyterians, and near it is the Free church. There are also places of worship for the Episcopalians, Independents and Roman Catholics. The ancient church of St. Ola, which is believed to have existed prior to the foundation of that of St. Magnus, and was then the only religious establishment, stood near the shore of the road or bay of Kirkwall, and from its situation the town originally obtained the appellation of Kirkjovanger, or the "Kirk on the bay," subsequently corrupted to Kirkwall. Opposite the cathedral, on the west side of the street, were the ruins of a fortress called the "King's castle," which time and the havoc of war had nearly levelled. It was a place of considerable strength in 1551, when, or soon after, it was occupied by the Earl of Orkney, natural son of James V. The remains were cleared away during the latter part of 1865, and a new street formed, called Castle street, leading to Harbour street. To the south of the cathedral are the remains of the ancient palace of the Bishops of Orkney, in which King Haco of Norway died after his defeat at Largs; and almost adjoining to these are the ruins of the Earl's Palace, built by Earl Patrick Stewart, about the beginning of the seventeenth century.

Kirkwall was created a royal burgh, in the first instance, by James III., and its charter was renewed by James V.; its government is confided to a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, a dean of guild, and eight councillors; it is a representative burgh, and unites with Tain, Wick, Dornoch, Dingwall, and Cromarty, in returning one member to Parliament, the gentleman at present sitting being Sir John Pender, G.C.M.G. The quarter sessions are held on the first Tuesday in March, May, and August, and the last Tuesday in October; the sheriff and small debts court are open every Tuesday during the sitting of the Supreme Court, and oftener when necessary. The new County Buildings, situated mid-way between the ruins of the Earl's and Bishop's palaces, are of an elaborate description, and were erected in 1877, at a cost of about £5,000. The masonry is principally composed of the well-known freestone of the district, the architecture being a combination of the ancient and modern styles. They contain ample accommodation for the local courts, county officials, and committee rooms, &c. and are connected with the gaol.

The harbour of Kirkwall is safe and commodious; it has two excellent piers, one, a massive and substantial structure, having been erected in 1885, at a cost of about £20,000, which enables steamers and other vessels to come to the pier head at all times of the tide; the outer bay affords good anchorage. Altogether, the situation of the place is well adapted for the resort of shipping. Fishing and fish curing occupy many persons, and the trade in timber is of some consequence. There are four branch banking establishments, and several hotels. Kirkwall sustains several educational establishments, including an academy or grammar school, which are now under the control of the Burgh School Board. The Poor House, a neat erection, built from funds supplied out of the rates, at a cost of about £3,000, gives accommodation to the poor of the whole county. The Balfour Hospital was founded by John Balfour, Esq. of Trenabie, for the relief of the sick and as an asylum for a certain number of aged, infirm persons, who are attended gratuitously by the faculty of Kirkwall. The Kirkwall fair was at one time famed for the extent of its business and the number of merchants and others attending from various distant places, and it has been compared to the famous Leipzig fair on a smaller scale. It is held on the first Tuesday after the 11th of August, and continues during that week and the one succeeding; but the business is now comparatively trifling. There is also a horse and cattle market held on the first Monday in every month. The population of Kirkwall and St. Ola in 1881 numbered 4,777, and in 1891, 4,724, of which number 3,895 belonged to the burgh of Kirkwall. Of the North Isles, Shapinsay contained at the last named date, 903 inhabitants; Rousay, Egilsay and Weir, 988; Westray, 2,108; Papa Westray, 837; Stronsay, 1,309; Eday and Pharay, 705; Sanday, 1,929; and North Ronaldshay, 501. Of the parishes, Deerness numbered 844; St. Andrews, 763; Holm, 950; St. Ola, 829; Orphir, 1,001; Firth, 729; Harray, 735; Birsay, 1,521; and Evie and Rendall, 1,233; of the South Isles, Buray contained 423 and South Ronaldshay, 2,636.

STROMNESS,

WITH THE PARISHES OF STENNESS AND SANDWICK, AND THE ISLANDS OF HOY, GRÆMSAY, AND FLOTTA,

STROMNESS is a burgh of barony and seaport, 14½ miles w. from Kirkwall, situated, as that town is, on the mainland (or Pomona Island) of the Orkneys, adjoining the sound of Hoy, opposite Græmsay Island. This place, which has risen within the last century from being a fishing hamlet, composed of a few scattered huts, to a populous town, owes its increase to its admirable harbour and convenient position, by which it is rendered a place of safe resort, in these stormy seas, to vessels trading with the north of the eastern or western hemispheres. Its harbour is a fine natural basin, extending from south to north more than a mile, and is sheltered from the Atlantic on the west by a high ridge of moorish ground, the southern extremity of which forms the north side of Hoy Sound; while its entrance is protected partly by the island of Græmsay, which lies midway in the sound, and partly by a ness or point of land which stretches from the westward. On the east side it is defended by two small islands or holms which extend along the back of it; and even beyond these, in a sort of outer harbour or roadstead, there is excellent anchorage for shipping. It was formerly no uncommon thing in the spring months to see in these havens upwards of fifty large vessels on their way to the whale fishery in Davis Straits and Greenland. They called here for the purpose of completing their complement of men, which was generally about twenty for each ship. In some years there were upwards of seven hundred men furnished from this port to Davis Straits, besides one hundred and fifty apprentices, but the numbers have for some years been gradually diminishing. Lobster fishing is carried on extensively and profitably. About five hundred men are engaged in the herring fishery, and employed by the Hud-on Bay Company, who have a resident agent. In this harbour captains may be supplied with necessaries to prosecute their voyage; and for repairs of vessels most efficient and expeditious means are afforded by a patent slip. The machinery of the slip is of a most substantial description, and by it a ship of seven hundred tons can be taken into the yard. A very extensive warehouse is situated at the north end of the town; and there is an excellent pier, with eighteen feet of water at spring tides. Boat and ship building is carried on. Branches respectively of the National, the Commercial, and the Union Bank of Scotland are established here, and there are two hotels. The Orkney Natural History Society's Museum contains Hugh Miller's celebrated Asterolepis, and many other specimens of much interest, and has been further enriched by assortments from the collection of the late Dr. Baikie. Stromness is a very irregularly built town, the habitations having been erected without any regard to uniformity of arrangement, and generally as near the sea as possible; some are even within flood mark, and protected by bulwarks, quays, and jetties, which each individual appears to have constructed as suited his own convenience and taste. Stromness is an independent burgh of barony by a charter held from the Crown, granted in 1817, when the government was vested in two bailies and nine councillors. The market days are first Wednesday of each month. An annual fair, held on the first Tuesday in September, continues for two days. The streets are paved, and there are gas works in the town. The population of Stromness in 1881 was 2,405, and in 1891 2,268. The parish of Stenness continued at the latter date 633 inhabitants; Sandwick, 1,107; Hoy and Græmsay, 597; and Walls and Flotta, 1,487.

THE SHETLAND ISLES,

OR ZETLAND ISLES, above one hundred in number, twenty-three of which only are inhabited, are a group of islands, islets, and rocks, situated in the Northern Ocean, about fifteen leagues north-east of the Orkneys, and forty-four west of Bergen, in Norway lying between 50 degs. 48 mins. 30secs., and 60 degs. 52 mins. north latitude, and between 1 deg. 52 secs. and 1 deg. 57 mins. west longitude from London. There are three principal islands in the group, namely, Mainland, Yell (on the north), and (still further north-east) Unst; on the east of Yell lies Fetlar, which is the largest of the inferior islands, the lochs of which are famous for trout, and several of the other islands abound with seal, otter, and wild fowl. The next island in point of size is Bressay; the smaller ones are Whalsay, Out Skerries, Samphray, Big Island, Mickie Roe, Papa Stour, House, Barray, Trondray, besides a great number of islets, holms, and skerries. The history of Shetland is so much involved in that of Orkney as to render an enlarged notice of its early history unnecessary. That the Romans visited the coasts of Shetland is highly probable, from the coins of that people which have been discovered—those of Galba, Vespasian, Trajan, and Ælius Cæsar; and the remains of a small Roman camp are to be traced on the island of Fetlar. There seems to be little doubt these islands were first inhabited by the Norwegians, the laws having been administered by "Udallers," who acted as a sort of petty princes. In the year 875, Harold Harfager, or "The Fair-haired," subdued these islands, and gave them to Count Sigurd, who was the first Earl of Orkney, from whom sprang the true Scandinavian dynasties of the Earls of Orkney and Shetland—the latter country being at first too insignificant to be included in the title, although it was included in the grant. On the cession of the Shetland Isles to the Scottish crown, the laws of the former were gradually encroached upon by the oppressive endeavours of the Scotch earls to introduce feudal subjection and seniorage in place of the ancient udal tenures. From 1468, when a marriage was concerted between the Scottish monarch, James III., and the Princess of Denmark (whom Orkney and Shetland were pledged to the royal husband), to the time when the two countries passed to the English crown, in the persons of Charles I. and II., and afterwards to the Earl of Morton (who sold the estate to Sir Lawrence Dundas), nothing occurs relating to the possession of Shetland distinct from that which has been already noticed of Orkney.

SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The general aspect of the country is bleak and barren; and although there is but little to attract in the form of landscape in what may be called the interior of the islands—the whole of them being destitute of wood—their coast scenery presents views of a highly interesting character; and the summer tourist who may be content to leave behind for awhile the rich luxuriance of an English landscape and take a peep at Nature in her more wild and romantic guise, will find in the diversified appearance and picturesque grandeur of the coast of Shetland ample gratification. The want of roads has been much felt by the inhabitants of Shetland, but Government are obviating this inconvenience by constructing roads between the principal inhabited parts; and where this means of communication does not exist, boats are called into use on the numerous fine "voes" which penetrate far into the interior. In travelling by land, the small ponies, or "shelties" as they are called, pursue their way across the wastes without much difficulty. The cattle of Shetland are of a very diminutive breed. A cow is said to weigh from two to three hundred weight upon an average; an ox from three to four, but seldom exceeding five hundred weight. A great abundance of poultry is kept on almost every farm, and small swine are very numerous. The sheep are very small but produce wool of an excellent quality, which is knitted into shawls, veils, stockings, gloves and mitts. Little attention is paid to agriculture, and the system of cultivation adopted is poor, the principal crops grown being oats, potatoes and turnips, the latter introduced early in the present century. The fuel in general use is peat, the cutting and drying of which occupies diligent attention. The highest land in these islands is Roeness Hill, which attains an elevation of one thousand four hundred and forty-seven feet. The Hill of Foula is next in altitude, being about one thousand three hundred feet above the level of the sea. The chief support of the Shetlander is dependent on the white fishery—herring, cod and ling abounding on the coasts; besides which many men and boys are employed every season in the Davis Straits whale fishing. Persons are also engaged in angling for the small fry of the coal fish or gadus carbonarius—known in Shetland by the name of "sethe." These swarm in myriads within the numerous creeks and sounds of this northern archipelago. They first appear in May, scarcely more than an inch long. About August they become more abundant, measuring about eight inches in length, and in the early part of the following year they attain the ordinary size of the cod-fish. A profitable fishery then takes place in deep tide-ways, supplying the inhabitants with a portion of food and oil from the livers for light and other purposes.

The Shetland Isles form twelve parochial divisions, comprising two presbyteries and a synod. The only town in this portion of the northern group is Lerwick; besides it, there are only a few villages and hamlets on the shores. The islands now pay their proportion of the land tax, and in every other respect have become subject to British laws. They are represented in Parliament (as already noticed) in connection with the Orkneys, to which sheriffdom they belong. The Lord-Lieutenant is Malcolm Laing, jun., Esq. The Acreage is estimated at 352,876, or 551 square miles. According to the census returns of 1891 the population numbered 29,705, and by those for 1891, 28,711; showing a decrease of 992.

LERWICK, SCALLOWAY, &c.

AND THE NORTH ISLES.

LERWICK, the principal town in Shetland, is (by steam), 272 miles from Edinburgh, 165 from Peterhead (Aberdeenshire), 126 from Wick, and 95 from Kirkwall, situate on the east coast of Mainland, or the largest island of the group. It bears the name of the bay upon whose margin it is built; and that, in its turn, derives its name from a long, narrow inlet on the opposite shore of the island of Bressay, called Lera-voe, and remarkable for its extensive deposit of clay and mud; a projecting point at the entrance to Lera-voe is called Lera-ness; and the whole bay, including the roadstead of Bressay sound, is named Lerwick, which signifies the "bay of clay," or "mud"—compounded of Icelandic leir, Danish leir (clay, mud), and Sino-Gothic wik, Danish vig, vig (an arm of the sea, an anchorage). The site of the town, comprising a lunated segment of the sea shore of nearly half a mile in length, and becoming gradually more elevated as it recedes from the coast line, presents the appearance of a perfect amphitheatre, and, when viewed from the opposite anchorage, the effect is singularly picturesque. The principal street extends through the whole length of the town, following the curvature of the sea shore, and numerous lanes and closes, constructed at right angles with it, lead to a spacious road on the eminence above the town. The houses are built of a species of grey sandstone, which abounds in the immediate vicinity, and which is both of considerable beauty and great durability, and in general they are far superior to those of the sister town of Kirkwall, in Orkney; but here, as in Kirkwall, the houses (with the exception of those very recently erected) seem to have dropped by accident into their respective localities, their owners apparently being indifferent whether fronts or backs, gables or corners, were planted towards the street; in several places, also, the buildings project so far into the main street, that there is scarcely room for a carriage to pass. The more offensive of these obstructions are, however, being gradually removed. A new Town Hall has been erected at the cost of about £5,500, the foundation stone of which was laid by the Duke of Edinburgh, 24th January, 1882. It is built in the Gothic and Scottish baronial styles of architecture, with Orkney freestone dressings. It was opened on the 12th of August, 1883. The architect was Mr. Alexander Rose, Inverness. In 1887, on the occasion of the Queen's jubilee, a handsome clock and a fine peal of eight bells, provided by public subscription and private donations, were placed in the building, at a cost of about £600. The other principal public buildings are the Town and County Buildings, Fort Charlotte, the parish and other churches, and Subscription Rooms. Fort Charlotte stands on a rocky eminence at the northern extremity of the town; its guns command the whole range of the anchorage, from the south to the north entrance of the harbour. It was originally built in the reign of Charles II.; but having been dismantled and allowed to fall into a state of dilapidation, it was rebuilt in 1781, and received the name it now bears in honour of the consort of George III. It is at present used as a training establishment for the Royal Naval Reserve. The poorhouse, erected outside the town at a cost of £5,000, gives accommodation to the poor of the whole of the county. Adjacent is the hospital built at an expenditure of £2,000.

The parish church stands above the town, towards its southern extremity; it is a substantial building, with a Doric front of hewn stone; but in consequence of the flatness of its roof, and the want of a spire, its external appearance is somewhat ponderous; internally, however, it is tastefully and commodiously fitted up. The Free church is a handsome modern building, neatly arranged. There are several other places of worship, substantial and spacious structures, of which a list, with their ministers, is appended.

Lerwick is a burgh of barony, having its municipal government vested in three bailies and nine councillors, with a separate board of police, all of whom are elected by the burgesses. A sheriff small debt court is held every Wednesday, and a bailie court is held as occasion requires. The justices of the peace, the commissioners of supply, and the provincial synod of Shetland also hold their meetings in Lerwick. The trade of this town is much more extensive than the amount of population would indicate. There are shops on both sides of the principal street; and the mercantile business which is transacted in some of the establishments here would be considered important in many a city in the kingdom. A considerable portion of the produce of Shetland, consisting of fresh and salted fish, beef, oil, butter and hosiery, passes to market through the merchants of Lerwick; and, in like manner, by them are imported nearly all the groceries, spirits and manufactured goods used throughout the islands. The harbour of Lerwick (or Bressay sound, as it is frequently called) is one of the most spacious, secure and commodious havens in the British empire. It is bounded on the east by the island of Bressay, and on the west by Mainland, having an entrance from the south and another from the north. Its extent may be inferred from the fact that, on more than one occasion, a fleet of upwards of ninety sail of war ships has anchored in it. Branches of the Commercial, Union and North of Scotland Banks are established here. The population of Lerwick in 1881 was 4,581, and in 1891, to which also now belong Burra and Quarff (92), 4,659. The population of the various parishes at the last-named period was as follows:—Bressay, 850; Delting, 1,512; Dunrossness, Sandwick, Cumminburgh and Fair Isle, 3,752; Fetlar, 863; Foula, 239; Nesting and Lunna-sting, 1,496; Northmavine, 2,178; Papa Stour, 244; Sandsting and Aithating, 2,565; Tingwall, Whiteness and Weisdale, 2,329; Walls and Sandness, 1,572; Whalsay and Out Skerries, 1,094; Unst, 2,250 and Vell, 2,614.

SCALLOWAY is a seaport village in the parish of Tingwall, 8 miles from Lerwick, situated on the north side of a fine bay on the west side of Mainland. Anciently this was the capital of Shetland. Near the village are the ruins of Scalloway Castle, erected in 1600, by Patrick Stewart, Earl of Orkney and Shetland. The inhabitants chiefly subsist by the herring fishery, and for facilitating the pursuit of this branch there is a large quay and extensive warehouse, coopers, &c. In the spring of the year "haaf" fishing for cod and ling is also successfully resorted to. The men of Scalloway are of a very fearless character, and frequently put to sea in such boisterous and stormy weather as would deter the most experienced and intrepid seamen of other quarters. They are also a very industrious and persevering race; some have fenced ground, and have erected houses for themselves. The parish church stands 3 miles from the village, at the head of a fine fresh-water loch; and there is a neat chapel of ease in the village, erected by the late Rev. John Turnbull. On the west shore is a spring of very excellent water, the flow from which is uninfluenced by the seasons, being constant and abundant; it is covered by the sea at high water. Not far distant is "Gallows Hill," so called from its having formerly been the place of execution. The last who suffered on the spot are said to have been two unfortunate females, who fell a sacrifice to superstition in the seventeenth century for the alleged crime of witchcraft. The parish of Tingwall numbered in 1881, 2,385, and in 1891, 2,329 inhabitants.

PEEBLES-SHIRE,

OR TWEEDDALE, a county in the southern part of Scotland, is bounded on the north and north-east by Edinburghshire, on the east and south-east by Selkirkshire, on the south by Dumfries-shire, and by the county of Lanark for almost the whole extent of its western border. In length, from its southern border to its extreme northern apex, it measures fully thirty miles; from east to west, including the parts on the latter boundary that mingle with Selkirkshire, its breadth is upwards of twenty miles, whilst in other parts it varies from ten to fifteen miles. Its form is exceedingly irregular, and it comprehends an area of 854 square miles, or 226,899 acres. In size Peebles is the twenty-third, and in population the thirtieth of the counties of Scotland.

NAME AND EARLY HISTORY.—The shire derives its present title from the county town, and Tweeddale from being the district in which the Tweed has its source, and the vale through which it pursues its course to the east. The Gadenii tribe of Britons, who inhabited this secluded territory on the Tweed, have left innumerable traces of their residence, demonstrated in the names of places, Druidic and warlike remains, and sepulchral tumuli. The Romans were the first people who broke in upon the British aborigines in the district. After the abdication of the Roman power, the Gadenii naturally associated with the kindred Britons of Strathclyde; and the descendants of those early settlers continued here throughout the Pictish period, and until the fortunes of the Scottish kings prevailed in 974. From the epoch of the migration of the Strathclyde Britons, in the ninth century, the Scots-Irish intermingled with the remaining Britons on the upper Tweed. The next and last class of intruders on the district were the Anglo-Saxons, from Lothian, who ultimately prevailed, and finally established a settlement in the shire. One of the chiefs of this people, called Eadulph, settled in the vale of Edleston water, to which, with the village, he communicated his name; in this manner those of Saxon lineage founded the families of rank in Peebles-shire. At different times the county suffered in a small degree from the inroads of marauders from the English side of the border, a circumstance which had the effect of keeping the people long in the exercise and possession of warlike weapons. At Philiphaugh, some of the heads of the best families fell, or were taken prisoners, fighting on the side of royalty but in the insurrection of 1679, in the West of Scotland, which was ended by the battle of Bothwell Bridge, there were not a dozen persons natives of Tweeddale. Since these stirring events neither the county nor its inhabitants have been in any way prominent in the scenes of history.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The county is an uninterrupted series of hill and mountain ranges, so close upon each other that there is scarcely to be found a plain of moderate dimensions in the district, and not one of any kind unless upon the margin of the Tweed or its tributaries. Notwithstanding the attempts made by several individuals to encourage new and better modes of agriculture, till within the last seventy years the management of arable farms was in a deplorably low condition; but within the last fifty years particularly, draining, ploughing, and planting have been carried on most effectually, and the general features of the country highly improved. The sides and summits of the hills are at the present time here and there clothed with exuberant plantations; and the great vale of the district and its minor valleys are now well cultivated, enclosed and divided; rich arable fields have taken the place of unproductive swamps, and are rapidly advancing up the sides of the hills. Barley and oats are the chief corn crops, but wheat is also grown on the richer low grounds. Beans, peas and potatoes are also cultivated, but not extensively, as are also turnips, the soil being admirably adapted for the growing of this root, upon which large numbers of sheep of the Cheviot and black-faced breeds are fed. The elevations for so small a county are very numerous, and some of them of considerable altitude. The following are among the most conspicuous in height above the level of the sea:—Hartfield, 2,916 feet; Broad Law, 2,850; Dollar Law, 2,840; Scrape, 2,560; Gums Cleugh, 2,200; Dundroich, Pykestane, and Hell's Cleugh, each 2,100; Cardon, 2,000; Cairn Hill, 1,800; Broughton Heights, 1,483; and Meikle, 1,480. Little can be said of the minerals of the county. At the north-east extremity of the shire coal is found, but at too great a distance to be of advantage to the general population; the county is in the same predicament as to freestone, and the houses are nearly all built of blue whinstone. At Stobo there is a valuable quarry of blue slate; limestone and marl are plentiful, and ironstone is found in some parts of the district. Peebles-shire is almost devoid of manufactures, except at Peebles and Innerleithen, where there are several mills for the manufacture of tweeds and shawls. It is remarkable that there is so little manufacturing industry displayed, when it is considered what a superiority the district possesses in the purity and fall of its waters, which make it altogether a most advantageous site for the establishment of paper and spinning mills, as well as general manufactories.

RIVERS, LAKES, AND RAILWAYS.—The principal river is the Tweed, distinguished as the fourth of Scottish streams. The upper sources of this beautiful water are found in the parish of Tweedsmuir, in this county. It is enriched by many tributaries, and, after passing the ancient town of Berwick, falls into the German Ocean. The other rivers are the Lyne, the Leithen, and the Manow, all of which are subsidiary to the Tweed, and the Leggett, which runs into St. Mary's Loch, in Selkirkshire. In the rivers and small lakes there are abundance of salmon and trout, and a lake, called the West Water Loch, is noted for the quantity of eels with which it swarms. The railway from Peebles to Edinburgh is the North British, and the one from Symington to Peebles, the Caledonian. There is also a railway to Innerleithen, a line from thence to Galashiels, and a railway to Linton, properly called West Linton, to distinguish it from East Linton, in Haddingtonshire.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—When the country began to be divided into sheriffdoms, about the twelfth century, Tweeddale was put under the jurisdiction of two sheriffs, one of whom was settled at Traquair, the other at Peebles. Peebles-shire, from its connection with the ancient kingdom of Strathclyde, became naturally a part of the diocese of Glasgow, in which it continued till the dissolution of episcopacy. The shire now comprises fourteen parishes, and two parts of parishes, it contains one royal burgh—Peebles—but possesses no representative burgh; the county, in conjunction with that of Selkirk, however, returns one member to the Imperial Parliament, the present representative being Walter Thorburn, Esq. The parliamentary constituency (in 1891-92 was 2,647. The Lord-Lieutenant of the county is Colin J. Mackenzie, Esq. of Portmore. The population in 1881 numbered 13,822, and in 1891, 14,760; increase 838. The valuation of the county for 1891-92 (including the burgh of Peebles, but exclusive of railways, which is £21,647), is £114,055.

INNERLEITHEN, WALKERBURN, AND TRAQUIR.

INNERLEITHEN, or Inverleithen, is a parish and village—the latter, respectable and pleasant, is 28 miles S. from Edinburgh, 16 N.W. from Selkirk, 12 W. from Galashiels, and 6 E.S.E. from Peebles, situated near the mouth of the Leithen, within a quarter of a mile of the left bank of the Tweed, and environed on the east and west by high and partly wooded hills. Upon the banks of the Leithen are several large woollen manufactories, the powerful machinery of which is propelled by the stream, and the works employ a considerable number of hands. Tweed and other woollen goods are made here in great perfection. There is also a silk mill, employing upwards of a hundred hands. The celebrity and some of the prosperity of the village are derived from the number of visitors who resort hither to the salubrious mineral springs, which possess properties similar in effect to the waters of Harrogate and Bridge of Allan, and are found eminently beneficial in cases of scrofulous disorders, inflammation of the eye, and various diseases originating in impurity of the blood. The springs are much frequented in the summer, particularly by families from the large cities, for whose accommodation there are a number of substantial houses, forming a neat small street along the public road, with a variety of houses behind, let as private furnished lodgings, and there are likewise three hotels. A well-house was erected in 1836. There is a branch of the Bank of Scotland, and a savings bank here. The village is well lighted with gas. Additional celebrity has been imparted to this place by Sir Walter Scott, in his novel called "St. Ronan's Well," of which this spot is supposed to be the scene. About three miles west, situated on a knoll, may be seen the ruins of Horsburgh Castle, one of the range of border pool towers, anciently possessed of much grandeur and strength. It is spoken of by Armstrong as being habitable in 1775. Between Innerleithen and Walkerburn are Purves Hill Terraces. They are planted with ash trees, but their contour may be easily made out; they vary from about 50 feet to about 120 feet in breadth, and the second in the ascent is over 300 feet in length; the depth between each terrace is about 14 feet. At one end of these terraces was situated Purves Hill Tower, but a few stones only remain to attest its site. Some fifty years ago an association was instituted styled the "St. Ronan's Border Club." It was composed of a great number of gentlemen connected with all parts of the county, under whose auspices was held an annual festival for the exhibition of Olympian and border games and gymnastic exercises. Though the club is extinct, the exhibition still takes place, the day of competition being usually in August. The places of worship are Established and Free churches—one for each, a United Presbyterian church, one for Independents, and a Roman Catholic chapel, a handsome edifice, built by benefactions left by the late Lady Louisa Stuart, of Traquair, the last of the direct line of that family. This parish, which embraces an area of 23,931 acres,

WALKERBURN, a mile and a half distant, is a village in the above parish. It contains two large woollen mills, a public hall holding about 800 persons, an Establishment and a Congregational church, a Board school, and a sub-post office. The village is supplied with spring water from the neighbouring hills. About forty years ago the village consisted of two cots and a farm house. About this time the late Henry Ballantyne, Esq., may be said to have founded its manufacturing industry, he having secured the use of the Tweed as a motive power for the mills, from Capt in Horsburgh, and subsequently, in a few years, he and the late Robert Freer built their woollen factories. The latter gentleman went no further in the enterprise, but disposed of his interest in the matter to Messrs. James Dalziel & Co., the present proprietors. The two mills give employment to a number of hands. Population in 1881, 1,026; and in 1891, 1,358.

TRAQUIR is a parish on the south bank of the Tweed, and watered also by the river Quair; it lies opposite to Innerleithen, with which place a communication has been opened by means of a fine modern girder bridge thrown across the Tweed, and erected at a cost of about £3,500. The general appearance of the parish is mountainous and pastoral; in it are Gumsclough and Mischmoor, lofty eminences lying on the old road to Selkirk, and over which Montrose retreated with his troops after his defeat at the battle of Philiphaugh. The old mansion-house of Traquair is delightfully situated on the banks of the Tweed, where that river and the Quair unite; and on the side of the hill overlooking the lawn is the "Bush about Traquair" (the subject of the celebrated ballad, pointed out by a few birch trees, the remains of a thicket or arbour, once the seat of pastoral love. Traquair House originally had a tower situated at the north-east corner, believed to have been erected before the year 900. Large additions were made to the tower by the first Earl of Traquair. The charterhouse of the family contains many ancient and important family and historical documents, some of which are dated as far back as the 9th century, and bear the signature of Malcolm III. There is an Established church situated about the centre of the parish, and also a Roman Catholic chapel. Traquair parish, which embraces an area of 15,327 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 754, and in 1891, 685.

PEEBLES,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF EDDLESTON, BROUGHTON, GLENHOLM AND KILBUCHO, DRUMELZIER, KIRKURD, LYNE AND MEGGET, MANOR, SKIRLING, STOBO, TWEEDSMUIR, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PEEBLES is an ancient royal burgh, the capital of its county and parish, and the seat of a presbytery; 22 miles s. from Edinburgh, the same distance w. by N. from Selkirk, 54 N.N.E. from Dumfries, and 47 E. by S. from Glasgow. It is situated in the centre of the parish, on a beautiful and large plain, having the Tweed running along its southern side, and the Peebles (or Eddleston) water along its northern limit, surrounded by an amphitheatre of hills, and its vicinity is adorned by numerous thriving plantations and elegant mansions. Among the latter, Kingsmeadows, Kerfield, Venlaw, and Rosetta are the most conspicuous as modern seats. Sir John Adam Hay, Bart., of Haystonie and Kingsmeadows, who is the principal proprietor of the parish, has thrown over the Tweed, in a romantic glen, about a mile below the town, an elegant wire bridge, which is much admired. The name of the town has been spelt different ways at different periods—Peblys, Pebles, and Peebles—and the present orthography is of no older date than the last century. For a long period Peebles has consisted of two towns, respectively called New and Old; the former occupies the ridge of a peninsula projecting westward, along the northern side of which flows the Eddleston before mentioned, over which is a bridge forming a communication with the Old Town, which lies on the face of sloping ground. The Eddleston water, by a bend round the head of the peninsula, falls into the Tweed, over which there is another bridge of five arches, which has been widened and greatly improved. The town is neat and clean, and the streets and principal shops are lighted with gas by a joint-stock company. Since the opening of the railway between here and Edinburgh, and the Caledonian Company's branch from Symington, a vast number of visitors from thence and more distant places have made this place their residence in summer, which has materially assisted to promote its prosperity; some very tasteful villas have been erected for private residences, as well as to accommodate the numerous visitors. Of the public buildings, independent of those for divine worship, the most conspicuous, either in respect to magnitude or architectural prominence, are Chambers' Institution, the Town and County Halls, in which assemblies and other meetings are held, and the Public Schools. As a town profiting by manufactures or external trade, Peebles takes a station inferior to many towns of less magnitude, and not so happily favoured by situation. Formerly the manufacture of serges was carried on to some extent, and at the beginning of the present century that of fine cotton cloths was introduced; but these branches have gone to decay. There are, however, four woollen mills, which give employment to a large number of hands, and several good hotels. The Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the British Linen Company Bank have each a branch here. Two newspapers are published here weekly, which have a good circulation.

The Chambers' Institution is a fine building in High street, containing a library of 13,000 volumes, a reading room, museum, or gallery of art, comprising many rare specimens from the museums of the Vatican, the Louvre, the British Museum, the Royal Institution Academy, Edinburgh, the students of Mr. D. Bracciana, London, and Mr. J. Annan, Edinburgh, and other collections. Within the edifice is also a large hall for lectures and exhibitions, and a county museum. This valuable property was presented to the burgh by the late Dr. William Chambers, of the eminent firm

W. & R. Chambers, whose names have been so long and honourably associated with the cheap literature of the country. A native of Peebles, Dr. Chambers always evinced a lively interest in the well-being of the burgh, and as a lasting and substantial proof of his desire for its material and intellectual advancement, purchased the building known as the Queensbury Lodge, and at considerable expense had it remodelled so as to form the above useful and ornamental pile. In the quadrangle of the institution stands the old cross of Peebles, which was restored to the burgh by Sir Adam Hay, Bart., after a sojourn of half a century at Kingsmeadows.

It is not satisfactorily ascertained at what period Peebles was erected a royal burgh; Alexander III. was a magnificent patron of it, and its original charter is supposed to have been bestowed by that monarch. Successive kings recognised its right to the distinction, among whom was James VI., whose charter granted to the burgesses an extensive range of landed property and right of common in different parts, nearly the whole of which has been lost to the inhabitants. The government is vested in a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, seven councillors and town clerk. A sheriff court is held on Tuesday and Thursday, and a sheriff small debt court every other Friday; general meetings of the County Council take place here in the months of April and September, and the meetings of Hieutenancy as occasion requires. A poor-house has been erected on the Rosetta road, in a well-chosen situation. The Royal Company of Archers, or Queen's Body Guard for Scotland, come to Peebles from Edinburgh occasionally, attired in the ancient and elegant dress of the bowmen of Scotland to shoot for the old-established prize of a silver arrow, given by the burgh to the most successful marksman.

The places of worship are for those of the Established Church, the Free Church, Episcopalians, United Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics; the last named on the Rosetta road, was erected in 1858, by the exertions of the Rev. J. Chapperton, aided by numerous friends. The new Established church, erected on the site of the former edifice, was opened March 24th, 1887, and cost about £10,000. It is built of stone, and is designed in the style of the thirteenth century period of Gothic architecture of the Scottish type, and contains upward of 1,200 sittings. The east front faces the High street, and the south front the bridge over the Tweed, and stands at a considerable height above it. The architect was Mr. William Young, of London. The Free church is a neat building, and the Episcopal church is finished in a superior style, and embellished with a beautiful window of stained glass. A United Presbyterian church has been erected at a cost of £4,000. It will seat 650 persons and has a hall adjacent, to hold 300. There are several friendly societies, and some excellent schools, both public and private; for the latter this town has been long and deservedly celebrated, with respect both to the method of instruction and the salubrity of their situation. The ruins of the two ancient churches are still extant, one of which was dedicated to St. Andrew, the other built by Alexander III. in the middle of the thirteenth century, and dedicated to the Holy Cross and St. Nicholas; the same monarch erected likewise a house contiguous, for himself, which contained a royal residence until the accession of James VI. to the throne of England. Among the objects in the town and neighbourhood which generally attract attention is Neidpath Castle, a noble ruin, looking down upon the town and the Tweed from a romantic glen, about a mile distant to the west. The building is a massive tower, and, with its interesting site and localities, is the delight of the draughtsman. This locality is much resorted to in summer for its excellent trout and salmon fishing. Half a mile to the east of the town, on a hill called Janet's Brae, may be discerned the traces of two ancient British camps. The market is held on a Tuesday, and fairs on the first Tuesday in March (for hiring servants), and the second Tuesday in October. The parish of Peebles has an area of 16,597 statute acres, and by the returns for 1881 had a population numbering 4,059, and by those for 1891, 5,261, of which the town contained 4,704.

EDLESTON (or Edlestone) is a parish and village, the latter 4 miles N. from Peebles, situated on both sides of the Edlestone water, which takes its rise from various springs on the north and north-east boundaries, and at Cowie's Lynn forms a cascade thirty-five feet high. The South Esk has also its source out of a small lake within two miles of the village. Anciently the kirk and its small hamlet stood among the hills to the east, where some vestiges of them still survive the depreciation of time. The church of the present village is a modern building, with a school attached. Acreage, 18,490; population in 1881, 711, and in 1891, 571.

KILBUCHO, BROUGHTON, AND GLENHOLM, are incorporated and contiguous parishes, agricultural and pastoral. The village of Broughton stands on the road from Edinburgh to Dumfries, and from Peebles to Biggar, and is remarkable for its neatness. A branch of the Caledonian Railway from Symington to Peebles passes through the parish. There is a church of the Establishment belonging to the united parishes. Acreage, 18,065; population in 1881, 665, and in 1891, 517.

DRUMELZIER (pronounced Drumelizer) is a parish in the south-western part of the county, lying on the east bank of the Tweed, where also stands Drumelzier Castle, formerly a seat of the once powerful family of Tweedie. It is surrounded by some beautiful grounds, and is the last of a chain of fortresses placed on the banks of the Tweed, which a vessel every two or three miles in pursuing the course of the stream. The parish church stands on the Powsall rivulet, a little way above its junction with the Tweed. Acreage, 17,918; population in 1881, 208, and in 1891, 187.

KIRKARD parish lies on the western confines of the county and is bounded on the north by the Tarth, a tributary of the Tweed. From the first-named river the land rises in finely cultivated and enclosed grounds, and then becomes hilly, with eminences covered with thriving plantations. The ancient church of Kirkard belonging to an early period to the bishops of Glasgow, one of whom gave it to the hospital of Solta, the property of which charitable institution it remained until transferred to the hospital of Trinity Church, Edinburgh. Acreage, 5,967; population in 1881, 282, and in 1891, 265.

LYNE and MEGGET are two parishes formerly ecclesiastically united, though not adjacent to each other. Lyne lies on the left bank of the stream of that name, while Megget is situated within the southern border of the county, near the head of Ettrick and Yarrow, and has been transferred to the last named parish. It is a bleak, hilly and pastoral district, intersected by the small stream Megget water, which falls into St. Mary's Loch. Acreage, 17,227; population in 1891, Lyne 104, Megget 88.

MANOR parish is bounded by Peebles on the north and Megget on the south, and its northern extremity abuts on the Tweed. The district is the vale of the Manor water, which rises in its southern hilly quarter, and falls into the Tweed about two miles west of Peebles, and from which the water supply for Peebles is taken. The parish formerly belonged to the rector of Peebles, and is supposed to derive its name from being the manor of that churchman. Several curiosities exist in this locality; among these the remains of a Roman camp, a tower raised on an eminence, supposed to have been erected as a watch tower in early troublous times, and a huge upright stone, of great age, perforated with many holes. But the greatest attraction is, perhaps, the cottage once inhabited by the late David Ritchie, a deformed and eccentric dwarf, from whom it is said, Sir Walter Scott drew the fictitious character of the "Black Dwarf," in his novel of that name. The cottage is situated in the vale near the public road at the farm steading called Woodhouse. Acreage, 16,222; population in 1881, 277, and in 1891, 249.

SKIRLING is a small parish and village—the latter 25 miles W. by S. from Edinburgh, and 2½ N.W. from Broughton, situated on the road from the city named to Leadhills. The parish is bounded on the north-east by Kirkard, on the east by Broughton, on the south by Kilbucho, and on the west by Biggar. It extends about four miles in length from north to south, having a general breadth of one mile and a half, with hilly surface, but green and fertile, and well cultivated. Acreage, 3,423; population in 1881, 274, and in 1891, 216.

STOBO is a generally well cultivated and planted parish in the western part of the county, lying for the most part on the left bank of the Tweed, and extending about six miles in length by four in breadth. The greater part of the parish is hilly and of a pastoral character; but adjacent to the Tweed and the Lyne the land is well cultivated, and some of it finely planted—the latter character of improvement especially in the grounds surrounding Stobo Castle, a modern and beautiful edifice, situated a short distance from the parish church, within view of the Tweed. Within the parish are extensive slate quarries, which, however, have not been wrought for some years. Acreage, 10,302; population in 1881, 467, and in 1891, 438.

TWEEDSMUIR about the middle of the 17th century formed part of the parish of Drumelzier, when it was erected into a separate parish. It lies in the south-western corner of the county, with Lanarkshire on its western border. There are several ancient and rude strongholds in the parish, some of them dignified by the name of "Castles," but having few features of the fortress character. Within the bounds of the parish the river Tweed is augmented by the streams of the Fruid and Talla. Acreage, 23,469; population in 1881, 215, and in 1891, 207.

WEST LINTON,

NEWLANDS, NOBLEHOUSE, ROMANNO BRIDGE, CARLOPS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

WEST LINTON is a parish and village; the latter, which is irregularly built, is 16 miles S.S.W. from Edinburgh, 10 N.W. from Peebles, and about 14 N.E. from Biggar, situated on the banks of the Lyne water. Besides this stream, the parish is watered by the North Esk; and although the greater part of the district is hilly, it is fertile, and famed for its excellent sheep pasturage. A church of the Establishment, one for the congregation of United Presbyterians, and one for the Episcopalians are the places of worship. Linton confers the title of baron upon the family of Traquair. A branch of the Bank of Scotland and a savings bank are established in the village, and there are several good schools. Lamancha was formerly a seat of the Earls of Dundonald up to the beginning of the present century, and after several changes became the property of James Mackintosh, Esq. Machie Hill lies partly in this and partly in Newlands parish, and was inherited by Amelia, third daughter of Sir William Montgomery, up to 1890, when it passed by marriage to the family of the Beresfords. The parish comprises an area of 28,255 statute acres, and its population in 1881 was 1,117, and in 1891, 1,008; of this number 970 were returned for the village. NEWLANDS is a parish lying between West Linton and Eddleston, watered by the Lyne and the Pointint, and is bounded on the N.E. by the North Esk, and on the N.W. by the Medwin, all of which are good troutling streams. The surface is diversified with hill and dale, and the hills are mostly green, without heath. Trees thrive in every part of the parish, and the greater part is enclosed by hedgerows and fences. The parish church, a small but neat edifice, is situated on the left bank of the Lyne water; and at the confluence of that stream with the Tarth stand the ruins of Drochil Castle, once a large structure, partly erected by the Regent Morton, and left unfinished when he was put to death on the scaffold. Whim, in this parish, a massive, gloomy and unpicturesque edifice resembling an hospital, once the property of the Argyll family, and afterwards that of Sir James Montgomery, baron of the Exchequer, is now the seat of J. Maitland Thompson, Esq. Acreage of the parish, 12,518; population in 1881, 819, and in 1891, 715. NOBLEHOUSE, in Newlands parish, was formerly known by an inn at which the trustees of the turnpike roads used to assemble. These meetings are now transferred to the County Hall, Peebles. The seat ROMANNO, in the parish, was at the end of the seventeenth century the property and residence of Dr. Alexander Pennycuik, the author of some clever poems and a poetical "Description of Tweeddale," a district of which he was a native. CARLOPS, in West Linton parish, is a small village, situate on the northern verge of the county, about 3 miles N.E. from West Linton. It originated in the year 1754, and takes its name from some localities in the neighbourhood called "Carling loughs," in allusion to a witch or carling jumping or leaping from crag to crag at the west end of the village, and who, it is said, "kept the country side in fear," in those parts, and whose traditional character, it is asserted furnished to Ramsay the idea of "Manse" in his pastoral of the "Gentle Shepherd." It is a great summer retreat for visitors, stands 1,000 feet above sea level, and is considered one of the healthiest villages in Scotland. The falls of the North Esk at Peter's Mill are of special interest.

PERTSHIRE.

THIS is one of the most extensive counties in Scotland, lying nearly in the centre of the kingdom, whose great northern and southern divisions it may be said in some measure to connect. It is bounded on the east by the county of Forfar; on the south-east by the counties of Kinross and Fife—from the latter county it is separated for a considerable distance by the Firth of Tay; further on the south its boundaries are Stirlingshire and the small county of Clackmannan, which latter it embraces on both sides; on the south-west Dumbarton touches it for a short distance; on the west it is bounded by Argyllshire; and on the north-west and north by Inverness-shire. The figure of the county is very irregular, being intruded upon by other counties in some quarters, and having many indentations and projections in other parts, but for these circumstances its form would be nearly that of a perfect circle. From the Firth of Forth at Culross, on the extreme south, to the Forest of Athole, at the source of the Tilt, on the north, it measures sixty-eight miles; and from Meikle on the east, to Argyllshire on the west, about seventy-seven miles. The contents of the area of Perthshire are estimated at 1,617,808 acres, or 2,527 square miles; and in size it ranks as the fourth, and in population as the eighth of the Scottish counties.

EARLY HISTORY.—The monuments of antiquity which exist in Perthshire are sufficiently numerous to afford a field of curious investigation. Lying northward of the Roman wall, this shire was the theatre of the last struggle for independence which the inhabitants of the low country of Scotland made against the arms of their skilful and then invincible oppressors; the final and most distinguished battle fought by the Britons was that against Agricola, under a leader to whom the Romans have given the name of Galacus. One of the roads formed by the invaders, passing along the district of Strathern towards Perth, may still be traced, and also from Perth along Strathmore, to the extremity of the county; the remains of several encampments, likewise, are at this day observable, particularly one at Ardoch, in the parish of Muthill, the largest and most conspicuous in Scotland. This shire also possesses antiquarian remains of a later age and history, in ruined towers and religious structures, the district having once been the residence of a number of powerful chiefs, and of a large body of churchmen. Before the Reformation and during the domination of episcopacy, Perthshire formed the ample diocese of a bishop whose seat was at Dunkeld, as well as another bishopric at Dunblane.

SOIL, SURFACE, AND CLIMATE.—Perthshire may be considered the Yorkshire of Scotland; like that immense county it is subdivided into districts, which previous to the jurisdiction established in 1748, were stewardries under the power of different great landed proprietors; the names of these various districts (or feudalities) are Menteith, Gowrie, Perth Proper, Strathern, Stormont, Breadalbane, Rannoch, Balquhider and Athole. Little attention, however, is now paid to these divisions, and the county is arranged more naturally under the two extensive denominations of Highland and Lowland, the range of Grampians forming the line of demarcation. Eighteen parishes belong to the Highland portion, while that of the Lowland comprises fifty-eight. The soil of Perthshire comprehends all the varieties known in Scotland—the carse and loamy being prevalent on the banks of the rivers, and the sandy and tillable classes on the sides of the hills; in many places are extensive mosses, particularly in Menteith district, but with the progress of agriculture some of these have been partially reclaimed. Within the last century there has been a great deal of planting in Perthshire, greatly to the amelioration of the climate and the advantage of the agriculturist. His Grace the late Duke of Athole acted a most distinguished part in the rearing of plantations; it appears from returns published in 1880, that he planted 15,475 English acres, the plants amounting to the enormous number of 27,231,600; of these plantations, the principal portion, to the amount of about 8,600 acres, are of larch, about 1,000 of oak, the remainder being Scotch fir, spruce fir, a few acres of birch, &c. The same patriotic nobleman exerted himself most beneficially in the improvement of the roads of the county, which have been brought into excellent condition. During the present century, a prodigious and most gratifying change has been effected in the agriculture of Perthshire, the low parts of which now vie in rural cultivation, wealth, and beauty with any district in Scotland; the upper portion of the county is still devoted to the pasturage of sheep and cattle, which are mostly driven southwards for sale and consumption. Wheat, oats, barley, beans and turnips are all cultivated, and yield good results. The climate on the whole is mild and salubrious, especially in the south, but in the north and west the cold is more general, in consequence of the elevated nature of the country; these districts are, nevertheless, dry and healthy, being screened by the Grampians from the northern blasts. The mountains of greatest altitude in Perthshire are:—Ben Lawers, 4,015; Ben More, 3,908; Ben Glas, 3,724; Schiehallion, 3,561; Ben Derig, 3,550; Ben Ardalanach, 3,500; Ben Ledi, 3,009; Ben Venue, 3,000; Ben Chonzi, 2,922; Farragon, 2,584; Ben Achally, 1,800; Birnam Hill (mentioned in Shakespeare's play of "Macbeth"), 1,580; Tarlum, 1,400; Bloir, 1,200; King's Seat, 1,196; Lochtown Hill, 1,172; Kimpurnie, 1,151; Benlodge, 1,040; Dunsinane (whereon was a stronghold of Macbeth, twelve miles from Birnam Hill), 1,024; Kinnoul, 700; and Barry, 688 feet above the level of the sea.

PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—The mineralogy of Perthshire affords sufficient materials to excite and to reward the curiosity and research of the scientific student of the work of nature; but in a commercial or economical point of view its minerals are of no great importance. At Culross, upon the Forth, coal has been wrought for ages; but from its situation it is of little advantage to this county. Limestone rocks are found in a variety of localities, both in the high and low country; but the use of lime is greatly impeded from the want of proper fuel for burning it—peat, which is the fuel of all the inland districts, being a weak and ineffectual agent in the process of calcination. Marble of a superior quality is worked near Glentworth; beds of fire-clay have been discovered near Culross, and in that neighbourhood, on the Devon, there is abundance of ironstone. About Callander that species of rock called breccia or more familiarly, "plum pudding stone," is not uncommon; and here also, as in other parts, are various kinds of slate. A chain of sandstone runs from Gartree to the vicinity of Crieff; upon the Tay is one of the most celebrated stone quarries in this country; the principal stone of which the Grampians consist is granite. Perthshire abounds with game of nearly every description, though the large species is now considerably diminished in numbers; the red deer, or stag, may be said to inhabit the forest and mountain glades in the most perfect state of nature and wildness; it is cautious in the extreme, and singularly jealous of the human form, eluding with wonderful effect the wiles of the sportsman. Other game are also inhabitants of these wilds; among the rest, the roe, a much more familiar animal than the stag, appearing, even in the summer, in the woodlands and plantations of the valleys, down to the habitable places. In regard to its natural features, Perth is esteemed a county of first-rate interest. From its inland situation, Perthshire of course does not comprise any combination of marine and mountain scenery, which form the great attraction of the West Highlands; yet, as it abounds in inland lakes, and possesses rising grounds of as grand a character as that district, it is in no respect inferior as the object of a "tour in search of the picturesque and beautiful;" while its charming plains may be said to form an additional attraction. The principal pursuit of industry in the towns and villages of Perthshire is the weaving of linen goods; in connection with this branch of manufacture, flax spinning mills and a considerable number of bleach fields are established. The manufactures of the county are not, however, wholly confined to that of linen—tweeds, winceys, blankets, and other woollen goods being manufactured. Cotton spinning works are in constant operation at Stanley and Doune; and considerable dye works, distilleries, breweries, and tanneries, together with iron foundries engineering works, &c., are found in several towns and villages. It may be remarked that the whole of this large and populous county exhibits in almost every portion manifestations of being in a thriving and prosperous condition, and affords a strong example of what has been effected during the last century, and a proof, in the civilisation of the country, of the exchange of a life of almost savage strife, ignorance, and poverty for one of intelligence, peace, and all the comforts to be procured by industry.

RIVERS, LAKES, AND RAILWAYS.—Like all elevated countries, Perthshire abounds with extensive lakes and rivers, which occupy valleys lying between lofty mountains. The chief running waters are the Tay, the Earn, the Garry, the Bran, the Almond, the Teath, the Allan, the Dochart, the Tummel, the Bruar, the Ericht, the Ardlie, the Shee, and the Isla—besides innumerable third and fourth-rate rivers and streamlets of all sizes. The Forth, from rising in Stirlingshire, is not considered a Perthshire river, though it flows along a large portion of its south-west quarter. The chief lakes of the county are Loch Katrine, Loch Achray, Loch Ard, Loch Voil, Loch Lubnaig, Loch Dochart, and Loch Earn. Those are in the south-west part of the shire; Loch Tay in the centre of the mountainous district, and Loch Rannoch, Loch Ericht, and Loch Lydoch, the two latter in part only, in the north-west quarter. In the lower division there are some smaller and less important lakes. The most remarkable mineral waters as yet discovered in this county are those of Pitscaithly, near the Bridge of Earn, which have long been famed for their efficacy in curing scrofula and complaints of the stomach. The county is intersected by the Caledonian, the North British, and the Highland railways, and from these main lines run many important branches.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Perthshire comprehends seventy-two entire parishes and twelve parts of parishes. The county is divided into ten districts, each under the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace court and a body of deputy-lieutenants; it is further divided into two sheriff-substitutes—the seat of one being Perth, the other Dunblane. The shire contains only two royal burghs—Perth and Cairness; the former returns one member to Parliament, and the latter is a contributory burgh, joining with Stirling, Queensferry, Inverkeithing, and Dunfermline, in sending another. The county for parliamentary purposes is now separated into two divisions, and sends one member for each. The present representatives are: East Division, Sir John G. S. Kinloch, Bart.; West Division, Sir Donald Currie, K.C.M.G. The parliamentary constituency for 1891-92 was: East Division, 7,585; West Division, 7,966. The lord-lieutenant of the county is the Duke of Athole, K.T. According to the census returns for 1881, the shire possessed a population of 129,007, and by those for 1891, 126,128, showing a decrease in the ten years of 2,879. The valuation of the county for 1891-92 (exclusive of railways and waterworks, which was £114,909) was £812,118.

ABERFELDY,

WITH THE PARISHES OF WEEM AND DULL.

ABERFELDY is a thriving and neat town, in the parish of Dull, 18 miles N.W. from Dunkeld, 9 W. from Logierait, and 6 S.E. from Kenmore; situated on the south bank of the beautiful river Tay, on the great Highland road, which crosses the river by a bridge, elegant and substantial, of three arches, constructed by the celebrated General Wade. This part of the county is justly recognised as the centre of the most beautiful scenes on the Tay, comprising mountain, dale, and wood, and the locality is likewise attractive from its proximity to the romantic falls of Moness. The burgh contains several establishments of business importance, including branches of the Bank of Scotland, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and a woollen manufactory, &c. There are also two large and commodious hotels, the Breadalbane Arms and the Station Hotel, the former being much patronised in the season by visitors on account of the facilities it affords for fishing in the Tay and Loch-na-Craig, parties staying at the hotel only having the privilege of the loch, while in the river, the hotel has a joint right with the Aberfeldy Angling Club. Owing to the increase of the town, which is lighted with gas, and well supplied with water, it has been found necessary to adopt the Lindsay Police Act of 1862, and it is now governed by a chief magistrate, who is ex-officio justice of peace for the county, and eight commissioners. A sheriff small debt court is held in the Town Hall on the first Mondays of April, August and December, when claims are settled to any amount not exceeding £12. The Ballinluig and Aberfeldy branch of the Highland railway terminates here. A monument was erected in 1887 to the Black Watch, in the form of a cairn, at a cost of about £500, to mark where the regiment was first formed. A new Board school was erected in 1886, at a cost of about £2,000, the old school being now a part of the Town Hall buildings. The Established, Free Church, Congregational and Roman Catholic bodies have each a place of worship. Several fairs were formerly held in the course of the year; but the only one now is on the last Thursday in October (old style), for cattle and sheep; weekly cattle sales are held on Thursday. Population in 1881, 1,260, and in 1891, 1,469.

WEEM is an extensive Highland parish in the district of Breadalbane. It is bounded on the north and west by the parish of Dull, on the east by Logierait, and on the south by the river Tay. The church of Weem is 74 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 84 N.W. from Perth, and 9 W. from Logierait. There is an Episcopal church (St. David's), built in the Norman style of architecture, at a cost of £2,000. It was the gift of Sir Robert Menzies, Bart. and friends. Near the church is Castle Menzies, the seat of the gentleman named above. It is a handsome building, with lofty turrets, surrounded by fine plantations, pleasure grounds, and orchards—a spot presenting a refreshing contrast to many other parts of the district. Near the castle is the Weem Hotel, an establishment admirably adapted for the reception of families and other visitors. It is sheltered from the north winds, and is placed in the midst of most delightful and interesting scenery, with which this locality abounds. Amongst the objects of interest in the immediate vicinity are Taymouth Castle, ruins of Garth Castle, Meggernie Castle, Birks of Aberfeldy, Falls of Moness, Acharn, and Keltney. The parish has an acreage of 41,837, and by the returns of 1881 had a population of 474.

DULL is also a large parish, comprehending a general length of thirty miles, by a breadth of about twelve. The river Tummel bounds the district on the north-east, and the Lyon and Tay on the south, which rivers abound with excellent salmon, and the lakes (of which there are fifteen, of large and small dimensions) abound with fine trout, pike, and eels. The military road from Stirling to Inverness passes through the entire length of the parish. The lofty mountain Schiehallion, which rises upwards of 3,500 feet, is seen on the northern border, with its brow shrouded in mist. The village of Dull is situated two miles west from Castle Menzies, and was at one time the seat of a Roman Catholic college, of which no traces now remain. An Established church is in the village. Acreage, 63,417. The population of the parish in 1881 numbered 2,565.

ABERNETHY,ABERARGIE, ARNGASK, DRON, AND GLENFARG.

ABERNETHY is a parish formerly lying partly in the county of Fife and partly in Perthshire, but the County Council commissioners have caused it to be now included entirely in the latter. The village—said to have been the capital of the Pictish kingdom of Scotland—is scattered over a considerable space of ground. It is 8 miles S.E. from Perth, and 14 W. from Cupar, in Fife, about half a mile south of the river Earn, near to its junction with the Tay. It is seated to the south of a spacious and rich agricultural dale, bounded by lofty hills, which are chiefly planted with timber. Some of the houses are tolerably well built, but the only structure deserving particular notice is a circular tower, the only one of its kind (with the exception of that at Brechin) in Scotland. It stands in an angle of the burial ground of the Established church, and is about seventy-five feet high and twenty-four feet in diameter at its base. The date of its erection is unknown, but tradition ascribes its origin to the Picts, who are said to have built it in one night, and that the stones of which it is constructed were removed from a distance of twelve miles by a formed line, one man passing them on to another until the whole work was completed. On the outside of the tower is yet to be seen the jouga (a padlocked collar and chain), a memorial of the discipline to which offenders were subjected in by-gone days. Abernethy is a burgh of barony, governed by two bailies, fifteen councilors, a treasurer, and a town-clerk; but it has lately been constituted a police burgh for sanitary purposes, under the Lindsay Police Act, 1862. The inhabitants are for the most part employed in salmon fishing and weaving. The parish of Abernethy is bounded by the river Earn on the north, on the east by Newburgh and Abdie, on the south by Auchtermuchty and Strathmiglo, and on the west by Dron and Arngask. It is between five and six miles both in breadth and length, comprising 9,544 acres, and, besides the village of its name already described, contains the small one of ABERARGIE, situated about a mile and a half to the west. A hill, a little to the north of Bion Farm, commands one of the finest views in Scotland, comprising Strathmore, Strathearn, the Grampians, Ochills, Eildons, Pentlands hills. Firth of Forth, Lochleven Castle, Glen Farg, &c. A fair is held on the fourth Wednesday in May. In 1881 this parish had a population of 1,714, and in 1891, 1,585, the police burgh having 862 of this number.

ARNGASK, a parish, and GLENFARG, its village, were formerly partly in the three counties of Kinross, Fife, and Perth, but are now wholly included in the latter county. The form of the parish is nearly circular, and it is about four miles in diameter, situated on the highway to Perth, and about 6½ miles N. from Kinross. The country here is hilly, and more pastoral than arable. The Farg, together with other streams in the vicinity, afford good sport to the angler. The beautiful scenery in the valley of the Farg is justly admired. The parish contains an Established church, a Free church, and a public school. There is a station at Glenfarg on the Edinburgh and Perth section of the North British line; about a mile from which is the hamlet of DUNCREIVIE, acreage, 6,450. Population in 1881, 547 and in 1891, 561.

DRON, a parish, 4 miles s. from Perth, in the south-western extremity of Perthshire, extending into the beautiful district of Strathearn, is divided from Abernethy on the east by the rivulet Farg. Although in some parts the surface is broken and irregular, in the lower parts the land is flat and fertile, being a portion of the rich carse of the Earn. The church—a handsome Gothic edifice—is a fine object on the rising ground to the left, on approaching the Bridge of Earn from the south. The Glenfarg railway is one of the connecting links the North British Railway Co. have constructed in connection with the Forth Bridge, to accelerate their traffic between the south and north of that bridge. It passes through the parish of Dron, and has its junction with the North British line at Bridge of Earn. This parish, which embraces an area of 4,188 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 335, and in 1891, 293.

ALYTH,

WITH GLENISLA AND RUTHVEN.

ALYTH is a parish, and contains the thriving town of its name; the latter is 62 miles N. from Edinburgh, 20 N.N.E. from Perth, 17 N.W. from Dundee, 12 W. from Forfar, 5 N.E. from Blairgowrie, and 4 N.W. from Meikle, pleasantly situated at the base of a range of hills on the small river Alyth. The parish is mostly in the county of Perth, but extends into that of Forfar, including a portion of Mount Blair, a conspicuous hill 2,260 feet above the level of the sea. The parish is divided into two considerable districts by the hills of Alyth, Loyal, and Barry. The southern district lying in the strath is about 4 miles long and 3 broad. This, as well as the tract of land towards the hills, is fertile and verdant, and watered by the river Isla and several small streams. The town has considerably improved since the completion of the railway in 1861. There are two mills employed in the manufacture of linen, which is carried on here to a considerable extent, and finds employment for a large number of the inhabitants. The new mill, erected by David Smith & Son, in 1873, is most complete, and calendering is carried on. Alyth was created a burgh of barony by James III., and a court was held on the first Tuesday in every month; but owing to the increase of the town it has been found necessary to adopt the Lindsay Police Act of 1862, and the town is now governed by a chief magistrate, who is an ex-officio justice of peace for the county, and eight commissioners. A new and substantial stone bridge was erected in 1883 over the burn of Alyth, at a cost of nearly £900. The town is plentifully supplied with good water. Being within an easy distance from Dundee, there are a number of visitors from that quarter during the summer months. The late Hon. William Ogilvy, of Loyal, left his large and valuable library of several thousand volumes for the benefit of the town and parish of Alyth. He bequeathed the sum of £500 to support and perpetuate his gift—£300 to be expended in erecting a suitable building for the same, the interest of the remaining £200 going towards the support of the institution. There are also several other benefactions, among which may be mentioned the Balendoch Fund, a sum of £30 per annum, bequeathed by the late Gilbert Hay, Esq., for the education and clothing of six boys and six girls, those of the names of Hay and Halkett being preferred; the Fenton Mortification, being £800 left by Mr. John Fenton, for providing coals and clothing for the poor; and the Ramsay bequest, being the interest of £418 left by the late Dowager Lady Ramsay, of Bamff, to be distributed annually among the poor of the district. There are two banking establishments in the town, and two first class hotels. The places of worship consist of the parish church, an imposing edifice in the Norman style, with a lofty spire; a Free church, and a chapel each for United Presbyterians and Episcopalians. Markets are held on the fourth Wednesday in January, February, March, April and December; the third Tuesday in May, hiring, cattle and sheep; the second Tuesday in June (old style); the first Tuesday in August; and the first Tuesday and Wednesday after the 11th of November. The entire parish contains an acreage of 23,296. The population in 1881 numbered 3,521, and in 1891, 3,317, of which the town contained 2,321.

GLENISLA is a parish in the county of Forfar, lying to the west of Luthrathen, and extending about 21 miles in length, and in general between 6 and 7 in breadth. A great part of it is the vale through which flows the river Isla. The kirktown of Glenisla stands on the left bank of the river. The castle of Forfar, a conspicuous object in the upper portion of the glen, was erected many centuries ago; but is now a ruin. In the upper reach of the parish is a fine deer forest on the Tulchan part of the Airlie estates. The places of worship are the parish and Free churches. There are also three public schools. A market is held on the Thursday before the last Wednesday in September. The acreage is 41,242, and the population in 1881 was 791, and in 1891, 676.

RUTHVEN is a parish situated on the north side of the vale of Strathmore, county of Forfar. It is about 2½ miles in length by about 2 in breadth. The river Isla divides the parish from Alyth. Colonel Thomas Wedderburn Ogilvy, of Ruthven House, is the sole proprietor. Several years ago the proprietor erected at his own cost a beautiful parish church, with manse. Acreage, 2,045; population in 1881, 195, and in 1891, 188.

AUCHTERARDER.

ABERUTHVEN, BLACKFORD, TRINITY GASK, AND FINDO GASK.

AUCHTERARDER is a parish and seat of a presbytery; the town, a considerable one, and of some consequence in manufactures, is 20 miles N.E. from Stirling, and 14 S.W. from Perth; situated on the high road between the two, on the south side of the river Earn (whose stream is famed for trout and salmon), and it is a station on the Scottish Central Section of the Caledonian railway. This place, which at one period enjoyed the distinction of being a royal burgh, consists of one large street which extends nearly a mile in length, and is famous as the place where originated the disruption in the Church of Scotland with the late Rev. Robert Young. The town owns about 200 acres of arable land, under a special Act of Parliament, which is managed by thirteen commissioners, two of whom retire annually, with the exception of the proprietor of the Lower Barony, whose seat at the Board is permanent; power is given in the Act to fence 30 acres. In 1873 experimental borings were made on the land for coal; none, however, was found; but a splendid flow of excellent water has continued to rise from the bores ever since, and they are known as the Coalbore springs. From 1790 to 1864 hand-loom weaving was extensively carried on, but this branch of industry has been superseded by the power loom, and at the present time there are several woollen factories, which give employment to a great number of the inhabitants. There are also two dye works in the parish. The town's water supply is one of the finest in the kingdom; it was introduced in 1832, by the late Captain Aytoun, of Glen-devon, and in the centre of the town is Aytoun Hall, which was erected to his memory in 1872, by the inhabitants. The ruins of Kincardine Castle, the ancient seat of the Montrose family, are in the neighbourhood. The road to the castle from Auchterarder passes between the bellows and forge of an ingenious blacksmith named Hally. Kincardine Glen, which is spanned on a fine viaduct, by the Scottish Central Section of the Caledonian railway, is a place of great natural beauty. Near Auchterarder is the combination poor house for the accommodation of this and fifteen adjoining parishes. Within recent years Auchterarder has celebrated the jubilee of two ministers, both of the U.P. church. The places of worship are an Established, a Free, and two United Presbyterian churches, and one for Roman Catholics. There is a corn market held on Saturday, and a live-stock sale on the last Tuesday in each month. The population of the parish, the area of which is 11,181 acres, was in 1881, 3,618, and in 1891, 3,494, the town possessing 2,535 of this number.

ABERUTHVEN is a small village in the parish of and situated 2½ miles N. from Auchterarder, on the road to Perth. The village contains a Free church and the ruins of an old church, part of which has been converted into a vault for the Duncan family, of Damside, and the Craeme family, of Inchbalkie; and a short distance hence is a mausoleum belonging to the noble family of Montrose. Dunning is the nearest railway station, about 2½ miles distant. Population in 1881, 881, and in 1891, 238.

BLACKFORD is a parish and village, the latter being situated 4 miles W. of Auchterarder, on the road from Stirling to Perth, at the extremity of the Ochil Hills. The parish is watered by the Allan, from the north of which river the ground rises and forms a group of sandy hills, with a number of vast hollows, some of them round, and others extending in length, forming little valleys, through which for the most part run small brooks. The village is of considerable size and importance, containing a tannery, and two breweries, one of the latter (R. & D. Sharp, Limited) having been in existence since 1830. The other trades are building, shoe manufacturing, and others usually found in villages. There is a branch of the Bank of Scotland, an Established and a Free church, and there are three Board schools in the parish and one in connection with the Free church. At Tullibardine there is an old chapel in a good state of preservation, inside which is a vault where the Strathallan family are interred. The Scottish Central Section of the Caledonian line passes through the village, and has a station here, Acreage, 21,453. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,595, and in 1891, 1,522, and of the village, 666.

FINDO GASK is a parish about 7 miles N.E. of Auchterarder. It contains an Established church and a public school. The nearest railway station is at Dunning, about three miles distant. Acreage, 5,185. Population in 1881, 364, and in 1891, 361.

TRINITY GASK is a parish about 5 miles N. of Auchterarder. The parish contains an Established church, a United Presbyterian church, and a public school. Adjoining Orchard Farm are the ruins of Gasken Hall, the scene of Wallace's interview with Fawdon's ghost, and on the farm of Cowgask there is a mineral well, the water of which is carried to Crieff and dispensed in the Well House in connection with the hydropathic establishment. It is said to be good in cases of dyspepsia. (Madderty is the nearest railway station, four miles distant. Acreage, 5,689. Population in 1881, 396, and in 1891, 386.

BLAIR ATHOLE,

WITH THE BRIDGE OF TILT, CALVINE AND STRUAN.

BLAIR ATHOLE, is a small village and parish, included in the district of Athol or Athole. What is now designated the parish of Blair Athole formerly consisted of four parishes, viz., Blair Lude, Kilmavonagh, and Strowan. The word Athole signifies pleasant land, and Blair of Athole, the name of the principal valley, means the field or vale of Athole. The district of Athole is forty-five miles in length, and thirty in breadth, and the parish is 24 miles from north-west to south-west, and 20 from north to south. It lies on the north-west Highlands of Perthshire, bounded on the south by Forthing, Foss and Moulin, and on the north by Inverness and Aberdeenshire, and on the east by Kirkmichael and Moulin, and on the west by Rannoch, and contains a large tract of Highland tri-terry, several of the mountains of which are covered with large and beautiful woods, interspersed with fertile vales, which are in a high state of cultivation. The valley of the Garry, from the pass of Killicrankie to the point of Strowan, may be considered the nucleus of the parish. The principal lakes and rivers are Loch Garry and Loch Tummel, and the Tummel, Tilt, and Garry, all abounding with a variety of fish. The village is situated on the north side of the Garry, 20 miles N.W. from Dunkeld and 7 N.W. from Pitlochry, on the Inverness road, where there is a station on the Highland railway.

Within a short distance of the village is the noble old Castle of Blair, the family residence of the Duke of Athole K.T. The castle has been, within the last few years, restored to its original form, according to a design by Mr. Bryce, of Edinburgh, and the addition of towers and turrets added much to its appearance. The woods in the neighbourhood are very fine, some of the larches being the oldest in Scotland. Three miles to the west of the village are the Falls of Bruar, consisting of a succession of cascades in a ravine of romantic beauty. The banks are covered with woods, planted by a late Duke of Athole, in answer to Burn's well-known "Petition of Bruar Water." Gas works have been erected, which at present supply the castle and hotels. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, is in operation; and in the village are also two excellent hotels. The population in 1871 was 1,742, and in 1891, 1,590, of which Blair Athole and Bridge of Tilt numbered 348.

In the parish of Blair Athole is the beautiful little village of BRIDGE OF TILT, separated only from Blair Athole by the water of Tilt, which is crossed by a bridge, that gives the prefix to the name of the place. It consists of a few cottages, the Free church, and also the old Episcopal church of Kilmavonagh; and its pretty rural aspect is embellished by the beautiful residence and grounds of William McIlroy, Esq., of Lude. Between the villages of Blair and Bridge of Tilt are situated the parish church, a plain but extended structure, and the parochial school buildings, which have been much improved.

CALVINE is a hamlet in this parish. The scenery around is very charming, and includes Glen Tilt, the Falls of Fender, &c., all combining to interest the tourist. The principal heritor of the parish is the Duke of Athole. Struan railway station is half a mile distant.
Population returned with the parish.

STRUAN, or STROWAN is a small village in the parish of Blair Athole, 5 miles N. from the latter place, at which there is one of the parish churches. In the churchyard is a remarkable stone with a Runic inscription, very interesting to antiquarians. There is a station here on the Highland line. Population returned with the parish.

BLAIRGOWRIE,

RATTRAY AND NEW RATTRAY, CLUNIE, BENDOCHY, LETHENDY, KINLOCH, AND PERSIE.

BLAIRGOWRIE is a parish containing the thriving town of its name—the latter 12 miles E. from Dunkeld, 5 S.W. from Alyth, and the same distance N. from Coupar-Angus; beautifully situated, on the southern slope of the range of hills which bound the valley of Strathmore on the north, and at the mouth of the pass through which the great north road to Fort George (by the Spittal of Glen-shee and the Castletown of Braemar) runs. The river Erich passes close to the town and propels the machinery of several flax-spinning mills on a large scale on both sides of the river; and there is also a linen manufactory, at which carpets also are now made. A branch of the Caledonian railway from Coupar Angus was opened in 1855 and by its means there is communication with most parts of the United Kingdom. Blairgowrie was created a burgh of barony in 1634, by a charter from Charles I. The affairs of the town are now governed by a baron bailie and eleven councillors, and by a board of police commissioners. A sheriff small debt court is held for the disposal of cases not exceeding £12 on the second Saturday in January, April, July and October. A police court sits when necessary. There are five branch banking establishments, two savings banks, and clubs for the votaries of angling, bowling, curling, &c.

The places of worship are two Established, two Free, and an Episcopal church, and chapels for Independents, United Presbyterians and Roman Catholics. Blairgowrie parish is of an irregular form, about eleven miles in length and three in breadth. It is divided into two districts by the Grampians, which rise immediately north of the town; the lower district is highly cultivated and fertile while the upper is comparatively barren and moorish, with the exception of the banks of the river, which is good alluvial soil.
The scenery in the neighbourhood of the town is very beautiful;
and in the adjoining parish, about Craighall (the seat of Lieutenant General James Clerk Rattray, C.B.), it is of the most romantic character and is scarcely surpassed in any part of Scotland; the proprietor kindly permits strangers visiting the place to walk through the entire grounds free on Tuesdays and Fridays. To the lovers of angling no locality could be more suitable for enjoying this amusement; there being not only excellent trout and salmon fishing in the Erich, the Tay, the Isla and the burns of the Lunan and Lorny (which are all within a moderate distance of the town), but likewise capital perch and pike fishing in the several lochs in the neighbourhood. On account of the inviting attractions around, the salubrity of the air, and the numerous lovely walks in the environs, the town is much frequented in summer by families from more crowded places, who are happy to exchange the confined atmosphere which they usually inhale for the invigorating breezes of the country. Amongst the antiquities of the vicinity, the remains of the Castle of Glascaun must be noticed;
they present a strikingly picturesque ruin, situated on the precipitous bank of a narrow wooded glen, about two miles from the town. Fairs are held at Blairgowrie on the 26th of May (if it falls on Wednesday, if not, on the first Wednesday after, the 23rd of July, the first Wednesday of November and the 22nd of November (or the first Tuesday after). A market for cattle and grain is also held every alternate Tuesday, which is well attended. The annual Martinmas market, for hiring and cattle, is held on the 23rd of November, except when the 23rd falls on a Saturday, Sunday or Monday, and there is also one on the first Wednesday in October. The parish has an area of 15,803 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 5,162, and in 1891, 4,661, of which the town possessed 3,714.

RATTRAY is a parish adjoining Blairgowrie, comprising the villages of OLD and NEW RATTRAY. The former, pleasant but irregular in its buildings, is situated about three-quarters of a mile east from Blairgowrie. New Rattray is of modern erection, and is connected with Blairgowrie by a bridge of four arches crossing the Erich. The parish extends four miles in length by two in breadth.
The surface is much diversified, the land on the banks of the river being arable and fertile, while the higher grounds are only suitable for pasture. On the banks of the river there are flax spinning mills, which afford employment to a large number of the inhabitants. To the south-east, on a rising ground called the Castle hill, remain the vestiges of the ancient Castle of Rattray; and about two miles north of the village stands Craighall, on a rock that rises one hundred feet perpendicularly. The places of worship are an Established church, built in 1820, a Free church, one for United Presbyterians, and a Wesleyan chapel, erected in 1887 at a cost of about £3,000. Acreage, 5,382. Population in 1881, 3,051, and in 1891, 2,689.

CLUNIE parish lies about 5 miles W. from Blairgowrie; it includes part of the lower range of the Grampians, which are barren, and covered with heather. The scenery, however, on the whole is romantic and pleasing, presenting a abundance of wood and water.
The loch of Clunie is one of the most beautiful small sheets of water in the country; within it is a small island, on which stands an ancient tower, the property of the Airie family, which is supposed to have been the birth-place of the "Admirable Crichton," whose father, Sir Robert Crichton, Lord Advocate of Scotland, was then proprietor of the barony of Clunie. The tower is still in good repair, and partly furnished, though rarely occupied; but it is open to strangers desirous of visiting it. On the northern side of the lake lies the charming property of Forneith, belonging to the Speid family. The parish, which embraces an area of 11,384 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 563, and in 1891, 489.

BENDOCHY is a parish in Strathmore, a few miles E. of Coupar-Angus, bounded on the east by the river Isla, and is divided into two parts by the river Erich. It is twelve miles in length, and from six to eight in breadth. There are seven small lakes in the parish, which has an area of 9,368 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 715, and in 1891, 478.

LETHENDY, a small parish bounded by Caputh on the south, Clunie on the west, and Blairgowrie on the east, is about three miles in length by one in breadth. The land is arable.

KINLOCH is a parish, bounded by Clunie on the south, Blairgowrie on the east, and Bendochy on the north, extending about seven miles in length, by an average breadth of one and a half. There are three lakes in the southern division, namely, Fenzies Loch, Rae Loch, and Marlee Loch. The parish church is situated on the public road, on the south-east verge of the district. Lethendy and Kinloch parishes embrace 7,060 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 404, and in 1891, 327.

PERSIE is an ecclesiastical parish taken from the parishes of Bendochy, Alyth, Meigle, and Blairgowrie.

BRIDGE OF EARN,

AND THE PARISHES OF DUNBARNEY AND RHYND.

BRIDGE OF EARN is a village in the parish of Dunbarney, 3½ miles s. from Perth. This village, which has of late years become a great place of resort on account of the celebrity of its mineral spring, is situated on the great north road, and is a station on the Edinburgh and Perth section of the North British Railway. A junction is effected here between the Glenfarg Railway and the North British line. Pitkeathly Wells are situated about a mile and a half from the village, the waters having long been celebrated for affording relief to those afflicted with gravel, scurvy, &c. Moncreiffe House, the seat of Sir Robert D. Moncreiffe, Bart., is a fine mansion, the grounds of which are very extensive, and beautifully wooded, and present a refreshing contrast to other parts of the district. The scenery around is beautiful and romantic. In the neighbourhood are some interesting and attractive objects, the most remarkable of which are the remains of a Pictish camp on the summit of Moredun Hill. In the village are Dunbarney parish church, a Free church and a public school. Population in 1831, 804, and in 1891, 238.

DUNBARNEY (or Dumbarny) parish is situated on the south-eastern part of the county, occupying a rich portion of the Lower Strathearn district, about a mile and a half s. from Perth. It is bounded by the hill of Moredun (or Moncreiffe) on the north, and on the west by Forgandenny. It is intersected by the river Earn in various windings; the flat and rising grounds being adorned with plantations, avenues, and refreshing hedgerows. The Earn is crossed in this parish by a handsome bridge, giving its name to the village above mentioned. This parish, which embraces an area of 4,060 acres, in 1831 contained a population of 756, and in 1891, 828.

RHYND is a small parish about 3 miles e. from Bridge of Earn and the same distance s.e. from Perth, situated at the confluence of the Tay and Earn, four miles in length, and one mile in breadth bounded on the west by the parishes of Dunbarney and Perth, on the north and east by Kinfauns and St. Madoes, from which it is separated by the Tay, and on the south by the parish of Abernethy, from which it is divided by the Earn. The Earl of Wemyss is chief landowner. The Castle of Elcho, now in ruins, was originally of great strength. The church is situated about the middle of the parish on an eminence, and commands an extensive view of the Carse of Gowrie and Lower Strathearn. There is also a public school. This parish, which has an area of 2,457 acres, in 1831 contained a population of 297, and in 1891, 270.

CALLANDER,

ABERFOYLE, BALQUHIDDER, BRIDGE OF TURK, LOCHEARNHEAD, PORT OF MENTEITH, RUSKIE, STRATHYRE, GARTMORE, TROSSACHS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CALLANDER is a modern and neat village and parish, and a burgh by the adoption of the Police (Scotland) Act, 1862; 52 miles n.w. from Edinburgh, 40 s.w. from Perth, 45 n. from Glasgow, 16 n.w. from Stirling, 8 n.w. from Doune, and 5 n.n.w. from Thornhill, situated in a beautiful valley on both sides of the Teith, which river is here crossed by a bridge of three arches; the houses are disposed in regular plan and covered with blue slates. The places of worship are an Established and a Free church, both of which are handsome modern buildings, and an Episcopal church. There are two Board schools and one conducted privately. The town possesses a station on a branch of the Caledonian railway. The facility of railway communication has been the means of bringing a great number of visitors and tourists during the summer to enjoy the beautiful scenery of Callander and neighbourhood; and many first-class villas and cottages have been erected and fitted up to meet their requirements; the three first-class hotels—The Dreadnought, McGregor's, and the Caledonian Temperance Hotel—also afford excellent accommodation. About a mile from Callander, and delightfully situated, is the establishment of the Callander Hydropathic Co. Limited, which was opened in June, 1882, and has convenience for about 180 visitors. The scenery around Callander is uncommonly beautiful; immediately above the village is a peculiarly lovely spot formed by the junction of two little rivers, issuing respectively from Loch Lubnag and Loch Vennacher, which when united form the Teith. Callander may be reckoned the threshold of the Highlands in this quarter. Two miles west of the village is the Pass of Leny, which affords access to a delightful range of mountain prospect; the bridge of Bracklyn is another fine point in the scenery directly surrounding Callander; and the ride to Loch Katrine and the Trossachs (classic scenes), about ten miles from the village, is extremely fine. The parish extends from the banks of the Teith to the Grampians, and is about 16 miles in length by a breadth of 10. The low grounds are arable and fertile, but the upper country is wild and heathy. Callander has four annual fairs—namely, the third Thursday of March, May 16th, third Tuesday of July, and third Thursday of December. The parish of Callander embraces an area of 51,186 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 2,167, and in 1891, 2,279; of this number the village contained 1,538.

ABERFOYLE, a parish (and the name of a celebrated pass or long valley between the Highlands and Lowlands), is remarkable for its picturesque scenery, its fine lakes and numerous streams, and the marked direction taken by the Grampians through the lower part of it, as well as for producing a great quantity of rare plants, suited to reward the researches of the botanist. The village, or "clachan," of Aberfoyle is the scene of some incidents in the novel of "Rob Roy." At the head of the valley or pass lies Loch Ard, a bright and placid basin, embedded in surrounding woods, over which rises the gracefully towering form of Ben Lomond, one of whose summit platforms ascends upwards of 3,000 feet above the level of the sea. The best view of this noble eminence is obtained from a wooded promontory which juts out into the water (scarcely leaving room for the road that passes on to the westward), and which, it is said, was the spot on which the skirmish occurred described in the above novel, where Helen Macgregor makes her first appearance. Loch Ard and Loch Chon, near Aberfoyle, are famous for their fishing, being considered the earliest fly-fishing lochs in Scotland, fish taking readily early in March. Mr. Blair's hotel, the Baillie Nicol Jarvie, affords excellent accommodation to tourists and visitors; there is also a good supply of boats in connection with the hotel for those piscatorially inclined. The North British railway has a station here. Fairs are held within the parish on the first Friday in August, and the third Thursday in October. The parish of Aberfoyle contains an area of 26,810 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 465, and in 1891, 1,023.

BALQUHIDDER is a Highland parish, lying in the western extremity of the county, among the Grampians. The village is situated at the east end of Loch Voil, at the distance of 18 miles N.W. from Callander, and is remarkable as the last residence of the famous Rob Roy, whose grave is pointed out in the churchyard. It was visited by her Majesty and Princesses Louise and Beatrice in 1869. The parish is altogether mountainous and pastoral, and from the number of acclivities forming its sides has obtained the popular appellation of the "Breaes of Balquhiddier," by which name it is celebrated in Scottish song and legend. It comprises several lofty mountains (among which Ben More rises in conspicuous superiority), and possesses many beautiful lakes, including Loch Doune, Loch Voil, part of Loch Lubnig, and part of Loch Earn, with several of minor celebrity. Lochearnhead is the nearest railway station, three miles distant. Balquhiddier has an area of 54,675 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 627 persons.

LOCHEARNHEAD is a beautiful little village in the parish of Balquhiddier, situated at the head of Loch Earn, from which it derives its name. The village has been twice visited by the Queen; the first time with the late Prince Consort in 1841, and again in September, 1869, in company with the Princesses Louise and Beatrice, who stayed at the hotel while on a visit to Sir Malcolm and Lady Helen Macgregor, the chief of the Macgregors, whose seat, Edinchip, is within half a mile of the village. The Callander and Oban railway possesses a station here, which passes high above the village, on the hillside, looking down on one of the most magnificent views that can be imagined. The station is two miles distant from the hotel, owing to the steep incline required to get over the hill into Glen Dochart. The loch is an elongated sheet of water eight miles in length, one in breadth, and said to be one hundred fathoms deep; it is at the foot of Glen Ogle, a wild pass or outlet from the Breadalbane country and the north-western Highlands. The beautiful scenery and quiet character of the place, with the many objects of interest, and the fine scenery, attract many visitors, tourists, and private families during the summer months. The views command the fine scenery of the lake, the upper part of Strathearn, and the mountains, one of the latter (Benvoirlich) rising from the shore to a height of 8,300 feet. In the village are a Free church and two good schools. Excellent fishing may be had in the loch, free to parties staying at the hotel, and omnibuses meet all trains. Population returned with the parish.

PORT OF MENTEITH (or Monteith) is a parish in the ancient district of Monteith, 15 miles N.W. from Stirling. The chief object of attraction in the parish is the Loch or Lake of Monteith, a beautiful sheet of water near the centre of the district, adjoining the church and manse. It is about five miles in circumference, and is adorned by the small island of Inchmaholm, where stand the fine remains of a priory or monastery, founded in 1238. The ruins of the church and cloisters are very extensive, and exhibit many fine specimens of old architecture of a massive nature. The archway entrance is very elegant. The dormitory and vaults have been for many ages the place of sepulture of many noble and ancient families. The ruins of these interesting buildings are sequestered in overhanging woods of considerable age and growth; some of the trees are said to be upwards of three centuries old. In this vicinity, on a gentle eminence, are seen the remains of what is still known as Queen Mary's Bower, where, after the disastrous battle of Pinkie, the young princess found a safe asylum till her departure for France. The boxwood bower, with its large hawthorn in the centre, where the youthful princess passed some of her happiest days, is still an object of interest to all who visit the island. On a smaller islet, a little distance from Inchmaholm, stand the ruins of the principal residence of the Earls of Monteith. The Monteith Hotel adjoins the loch, and is capable of affording excellent accommodation to visitors who wish to enjoy the beautiful scenery of the district. There is a station on the North British line, situated about four miles from the hotel. Acreage of the parish, 22,288. Population in 1881, 1,175, and in 1891, 1,092.

GARTMORE is a village in the parish of Port of Monteith. Mr. John McDonald, a Glasgow merchant (who was born here), built and presented a library to the village, the charge for membership being merely nominal—one shilling per annum. He also gives the rent of a house adjoining, to assist in meeting current expenses. There is a station on the North British line, about a mile and a half distant. Population returned with the parish.

STRATHYRE is a small village in the parish of Balquhiddier, 8 miles N.W. from Callander, and a station on the Callander and Oban railway. There are two inns and a temperance hotel in the village, where ample accommodation is afforded to visitors. Population returned with the parish.

HAMMERSMITH is a small hamlet in Port of Monteith parish. The nearest railway station is Port of Monteith, 5 miles distant. Population returned with the parish.

RUSKIE is a small hamlet in the parish of Port of Monteith. Kippen is the nearest railway station, 4 miles distant. Population returned with the parish.

TROSSACHS (classicscences) is a mountainous district in the west portion of the parish of Callander, and comprises the most magnificent lake and mountain scenery in Scotland. The church (quoad sacra) and manse are about a mile and a half from Loch Katrine and 8 miles from Callander. A short distance from the church is the Trossachs Hotel, an establishment well known to visitors and tourists, who come from all parts of the kingdom to enjoy the splendid scenery in the neighbourhood of the Trossachs, Loch Katrine, Loch Achray, Loch Vennoch, &c. Callander is the nearest railway station. The BRIDGE OF TURK, made famous by the poet—

And when the Bridge of Turk was won,
The headmost horseman rode alone, is a small hamlet in this parish, and contains a school, and the ruins of a very large and handsome hotel, which was unfortunately burned down some time ago. The nearest railway station is at Callander, 6½ miles distant.

COMRIE, SAINT FILLANS, AND MONZIEVAIRD.

COMRIE is a parish and village; the latter a populous one, being 58 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 24 W. from Perth, and 9½ W. from Crieff; situated in a beautiful and romantic valley at the foot of the Grampians, and on the north bank of the Earn, at the junction of the Leadnock. Loch Earn lies at the western extremity of the parish, and from it flows the beautiful Earn, along which there is a public road through the valley of Strathearn. There is a branch bank and a reading room, the latter well supplied with local and foreign papers, periodicals, &c. The beautiful scenery in the neighbourhood of Comrie and Saint Fillans attract a considerable number of visitors during the summer. The places of worship are Established, Free, United Presbyterian, and Episcopal churches.
In the neighbourhood are presented some interesting and attractive objects; the most remarkable are vestiges of Roman encampments on the plains of Dalginross, several Druidical circles, and a monument of granite, seventy-two feet high, erected in 1815, to the memory of a late Lord Melville. There is also another memorial, formed of the same material, eighty feet high, to the memory of the late Sir David Baird. Five fairs are held in the year, namely, St.
Kessac's on the 22nd of March, the first Tuesday in May, the 11th of July, the 8th of November, and the 4th of December. There is a station here on the Crieff and Comrie branch of the Caledonian line.
Comrie parish has an area of 60,593 acres, and in 1881, had a population of 1,858, and in 1891, 1,408; of this number the village had 1,074.

MONZIEVAIRD parish includes the abrogated parish of STROWAN.
Thus united, it is bounded on the north by Comrie and Monzie, by the former also on the west, by Muthill on the south, and by Crieff on the east. The river Earn passes through the district from west to east; and in the neighbourhood of this stream the country is beautiful, well planted and enclosed. There are several small lakes in the parish, among which Monzievaired lake, situated at the bottom of a wood, and well stored with pike, perch and eels, is a delightful object to passengers, and a great ornament to the pleasure grounds of Ochertyre. On the bank of the lake a fine repeating echo is produced. There are some other seats of great beauty and taste, among which Lawers is the most distinguished. It was in this parish that the atrocious act of annihilation was all but carried into effect upon the clan Murray by the clan Drummond. The latter being the most powerful, collected the men, women and children of the Murray clan in the old parish church and set fire to it, when every soul was burned save one, who leaped out of the window and was caught in the arms of one of the Drummonds, who, being more humane than the rest, saved the man's life. There are a church and public school in the parish. The nearest railway station is Comrie, three miles distant. Acreage, 26,039. Population in 1881, 700, and in 1891, 609.

SAINT FILLANS is a small hamlet in the parish of Comrie, 5½ miles W.N.W. from that village, its nearest railway station pleasantly situated at the foot of Loch Earn, where boats are kept for the accommodation of fishing parties or other visitors who are attracted hither by the delightful scenery of this district. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment and a Free church; and there is an excellent inn affording every accommodation to gentlemen during the fishing and shooting season. Population returned with the parish

ON THE CRIEFF AND COMRIE BRANCH OF THE CALEDONIAN LINE.
Station, COMRIE

COACH.

To CRIEFF, at 8 45 morning, and at 3 25
afternoon

COUPAR-ANGUS,

WITH THE PARISH OF CARGILL AND THE VILLAGES OF BURRELTON, WOODSIDE, WOLF HILL, AND WASHINGTON.

COUPAR-ANGUS is a neat market town in the parish of its name
15 miles N.W. from Dundee, 12½ E. by N. from Perth, and 4½ S.E. from Blairgowrie. It is a station on the Caledonian railway, and pleasantly situated on the Isla, a few miles above its junction with the Tay, on the main roads from Dundee to Blairgowrie and from Perth to Forfar. There is a branch of the Caledonian railway from Coupar to Blairgowrie. A small stream, tributary to the Isla, divides the town into two parts; that portion which lies to the south of this rivulet is all that belongs to the county of Angus (or Forfar). In ancient times this place was the seat of an abbey of Cistercian monks, founded by Malcolm IV. in 1164, and endowed with considerable revenues by that monarch. At the Reformation this edifice, which was of considerable magnitude, was destroyed by a mob from Perth. The remains occupy part of the site of a Roman camp, said to have been formed by the army of Agricola in his seventh expedition. The town is compact and well built, and has the advantage of being lighted with gas, and within recent years considerable improvements have been made: The venerable steeple in Queen street is used as a clock tower. The street formerly called Abbey street is now Queen street, to perpetuate the remembrance of her Majesty's transit through Coupar-Angus in 1849. Considerable quantities of linen fabrics are manufactured here, the power loom factories adding much to the prosperity of the place. The Royal is the principal hotel. There are three banking establishments, viz., branches respectively of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Bank of Scotland, and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited. A Town Hall, a substantial building in the Elizabethan style, from designs by Mr. James Smart, of Perth, was opened in August, 1887.

The cost, about £3,500, was defrayed by public subscription. The public hall is 64 feet in length by 38 feet in breadth, and is capable of seating 600 persons; there are also reading and other rooms, a commissioners' hall, &c. The sanitary condition of the town is very good, a new drainage system having been introduced in 1885 and completed in 1887, at a cost of about £4,500. The town is governed by commissioners of police and police magistrates under the provisions of the Police Act of 1862. Its municipal affairs are administered by a board of nine police commissioners, of whom the chief commissioner is ex-officio a justice of peace for the county.
A sheriff small debt court is held on the Monday after the second Saturday in January, April, July and October. The Police Commissioners are the local authority for sanitary affairs, and under their auspices the town is now plentifully supplied with good water from the estate of Pitcur, about two miles south from Coupar-Angus, the supply having previously been very unsatisfactory.

The old parish church was an ancient building, and was so far decayed as to necessitate its being taken down. A larger and more elaborate edifice, in the Gothic style, has been erected on the site.
The church has a large graveyard around it, in which are several old tombs and monuments; this edifice stands in Forfarshire. There are a Free church and four other places of worship not connected with the Establishment. A new public school was erected in 1876, with accommodation for upwards of 500 scholars. The parish of Coupar-Angus extends five miles along the east bank of the river Isla, varying from one to two miles in breadth; the surface, arable and meadow land, is well cultivated and enclosed. Though called Coupar-Angus, there is in reality but a small portion of the town or parish in the county of Forfar or Angus. The village of WASHINGTON is situated in the southern part of the parish. There is a market for grain every Thursday. A fair is held on the third Thursday in March for horses and cattle. Coupar-Angus parish embraces an area of 4,699 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 2,816, and in 1891, 2,761, of which the town contained 3,168.

CARGILL is a parish and village situated in the vale of Strathmore, the latter about 5 miles S.W. from Coupar-Angus, and is a station on the Caledonian railway. The extent of the parish from east to west is about six miles, and from north to south about four miles, bounded on the south by Collace and Saint Martins, on the west by the River Tay, on the north by Caputh and Coupar-Angus, and on the east by Coupar-Angus and Kettins. The rivers Tay and Isla join in the parish. WOLFHILL is a hamlet in this parish. The church is a plain but substantial edifice, erected in 1883, and there is also a public school. Cargill parish, which is purely agricultural, the soil varying from a heavy clay to a light sandy loam, embraces an area of 9,495 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,348, and in 1891, 1,239.

WOODSIDE and BURRELTON are villages lying close together in the parish of Cargill, on the road from Coupar-Angus to Perth, distant 2 to 3 miles N.E. from the former place. There is a station on the Caledonian railway, a Free church at Woodside, and a public school at Burrelton. Population in 1891, 452.

CRIEFF,

WITH THE PARISHES OF MONZIE, FOWLIS WESTER, AND MADDERTY, AND THE VILLAGES OF HARRIETFIELD, GILMERTON, BUCHANTY, LOGIEALMOND, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CRIEFF is a parish, market town, and burgh, under the General Police (Scotland) Act, 1862. The town is 22 miles s. from Stirling, 17 w. from Perth, and 6½ n. from Comrie, situated in Upper Strathern, one of the most delightful districts in Scotland, on the declivity of a hill, on the southern range of the Grampians, having the Earn and several streams at the bottom, backed by hills, crags, and the Knock of Crieff, all of considerable altitude—the outposts of the ancient Grampians and the bulwarks of Scottish independence. Upper Strathern occupies the mouth of several important passes, the Sma' Glen being the place where the Romans had a station, and where tradition lays the bones of Ossian, and points to a fragment of his displaced tombstone. It proceeds into the highlands of Perthshire, having a wild mountainous region on the one side and rich soft vales on the other. Crieff is a thriving and increasing town, deriving no small advantage from the resort in the summer months of invalids and others, who are attracted by the beauty of the scenery and the salubrity of its situation. During the past few years a great improvement has been made by the erection of commodious villas for the accommodation of the better class of summer visitors. Crieff has for a century been landed as the Montpelier of Scotland, and its salubrity of air and beauty of scenery go far to entitle it to this appellation. The healthiness of the locality is attested by the returns of the Registrar, which show that the mortality of the parish is lower than in any even of the rural districts of Scotland. As regards railway communication, Crieff is connected with the railway system of the country by the Crief Junction and by the Perth, Methven and Crieff, and the Crieff and Comrie railways, being branches of the Caledonian line. It is favoured, too, in being the seat of educational establishments of the first order. Among these are Morrison's Academy, endowed by the late Thomas Morrison, builder, Edinburgh, who bequeathed about £20,000 for this purpose. Out of this sum his trustees purchased the site on which the academy is erected. A complete education is given to the sons and daughters of the middle classes, the departments being separate. It is conducted by a rector and staff of assistants, and has attracted pupils from all parts of the kingdom. A new wing has been erected at the east end of the school buildings, for the rector and for the accommodation of boarders. Taylor's Institution was founded and endowed by William Taylor, of Cornton, who died in 1841, and left his whole fortune "for educating the children of the poor in the most useful branches of education, and for the formation of a suitable library, with lectures on such branches of science as may interest the community at large, and tend to elevate their intellectual character and promote their temporal happiness." For these purposes a suitable building, with a house for the master, has been erected at the east end of the town. The school and buildings have been transferred to the School Board, and the whole of the funds left by Mr. Taylor are now administered by the governors of Taylor's trust, who are instructed to employ the free income in establishing a free library (opened in 1891), and containing about 2,000 volumes. In 1867 the Strathern Hydropathic Establishment was erected, at a cost of nearly £80,000. It occupies a splendid site in front of the Knock, and overlooks an extensive landscape of varied beauty. Water of the finest quality is supplied at the rate of 20,000 gallons per day. The internal arrangements for the comfort and convenience of the visitors are admirable, and the success of the institution, under the able management of Dr. Meikle, has exceeded expectation. There is accommodation for about 250 visitors.

The Old Drummond Arms, in which Prince Charles Edward Stuart passed a night in 1745, was feued by the trustees of the late Lady Wlloughby de Eresby to the Commercial Bank of Scotland Limited, and premises for the bank and a large hotel have been erected. The buildings are among the most handsome in the town, and add greatly to the appearance of the principal square in which they are erected. In the town are six branch banks and a savings bank, and two newspapers are published here—the Strathern Herald and the Crieff Journal. A sheriff small debt court is held quarterly, on the first Saturday in March, June, September, and December. The places of worship are St. Michael's and West Parish churches, a Free church, and others for United Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Roman Catholics, and Baptists. The weekly market is held on Tuesday, and fairs are held on the first Tuesday in each month. The parish of Crieff contains 20,585 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 4,852, and in 1891, 5,295.

The parish of MONZIE, which is about 3 miles n.e. of Crieff, its nearest railway station, lies on the south side of the Grampians. It is a mountainous district, not above one-third part being arable, the remainder being heath and moss. It is watered by the Almond, the Keltic, and the Shaggy, upon which are several romantic cascades. The only inhabited portions of the district are two valleys, separated from each other by a ridge of hills four miles broad. The church is a modern building, and there is also a Board school. Acreage, 21,487; population in 1881, 753.

FOWLIS WESTER is a large parish in the district of Strathern and lying north-east of Crieff. The nearest railway station is Abercainy, 2¼ miles distant. Acreage, 22,803; population in 1881, 1,112, and in 1891, 853.

GILMERTON is a village in the parish of Fowlis Wester. Crieff railway station is 2 miles distant; population returned with the parish.

BUCHANTY is a small village in the parish of Fowlis Wester. Methven is the nearest railway station, 7 miles distant; population returned with the parish.

MADDERTY is a small parish about 5 miles n. from Crieff. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture. Here are an Established church, a Free church, and a public school. The railway station is situated about a mile and a half from the village. Acreage, 4,861; population in 1881, 527, and in 1891, 488.

HARRIETFIELD is a village in the parish of Monzie, situated 11 miles n.w. from Perth. The nearest railway station is Methven, 5 miles distant; population returned with the parish.

LOGIEALMOND is an extensive district in the parish of Monzie, situated 10 miles n.w. from Perth. Methven is the nearest railway station, 4 miles distant; population returned with the parish.

COACH.

To COMRIE, a Coach from the Railway station, at 10.20 a.m. & 6.40 p.m.

DOUNE, DEANSTON AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

DOUNE is a thriving village in the parish of Kilmadock and district of Monteith, 44 miles W.N.W. from Edinburgh, 31½ S.W.
from Perth, 19 S.W. from Crieff, 9 N.W. from Stirling, 8 S.E. from Cauldwell, 4 N.E. from Thornhill, and the same distance W. from Dunblane. There is a station here on the Dunblane, Doune and Cauldwell branch of the Caledonian railway. The town occupies a pleasant situation on the north bank of the Teith, and consists principally of three streets, radiating from a centre, where the market cross stands. Doune was formerly noted for its manufacture of Highland pistols, but this business has long become extinct. The cotton manufacture is carried on; and there are established in Doune branches of the United Bank of Scotland, Limited, and Royal Bank of Scotland.

In 1822 a new parish church with a handsome tower was erected, in the Gothic style of architecture. The interior is ornamented with a beautiful pulpit, particularly worthy of notice. For this much needed work the parishioners are indebted to the Earl of Moray, the chief heritor of the parish, and owner of Doune Castle, formerly the family seat of the Earls of Monteith. The ruins of this once noble castle stands in the immediate neighbourhood, upon an elevated peninsula formed by the junction of the Ardoch water with the Teith. To judge from the massiveness and extent of its remains, the castle appears to have belonged to that first-class order of Scottish fortresses of which those of Edinburgh, Stirling and Dumbarton afford entire specimens. There still remains one huge square building, the walls of which are forty feet high and ten feet thick, with a tower which arises above the rest to the height of eighty feet, ascending proudly over the lofty trees that encompass the place, and overlooking a country eminent in beauty and fertility. This building has during the last few years been partially restored by the Earl of Moray, the hereditary keeper thereof. A considerable portion has been roofed in, and part of the interior, notably the baronial hall, has been restored to its original condition. The outer walls and battlements have also been repaired so as to show the original structure and extent of the edifice. The whole restoration involved an outlay of several thousand pounds. The old bridge which crosses the Teith a little above the castle was erected by Robert Spital, a native of Stirling, who had amassed a fortune as tailor to Princess Margaret of England, widow of James IV. This bridge was widened by three feet in 1866. The Princess Margaret was a frequent inhabitant of Doune Castle, and the unfortunate Mary Queen of Scots is said also to have resided some time in it.

In 1867 a handsome Free church was built to replace one erected in 1843. There is also a church belonging to the Episcopal body, and about midway between Doune and Deanston there is a place of worship in connection with the United Presbyterian body. In October, 1875, was opened a new Roman Catholic chapel, built at a cost of about £3,800, which will seat 300 worshippers. The parish of Kilmadock comprises a district of great fertility; the land upon the banks of the Forth and Teith produces abundant crops of every description of grain. From the level margin of the former river the ground rises gradually to the Grampian mountains, which form the northern boundary of the parish; the face of the country here is delightful, with many romantic features. Fairs are held in Doune on the second Wednesday in May, the last Wednesday in July, the first Tuesday and Wednesday and the fourth Wednesday in November. The acreage of the parish of Kilmadock is 24,783, and the population in 1881 numbered 3,012, and in 1891, 2,887, Doune containing 940 of that number.

DEANSTON, a village in the parish of Kilmadock, is one mile from Doune. The extensive cotton mill of James Findlay & Co. is situated here. The nearest railway station is Doune. Population in 1891, 725.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY,
ON THE DUNBLANE, DOUNE AND CALLANDER BRANCH OF THE CALEDONIAN LINE.
Station, DOUNE—John Bruce, station master

A BURGH by the adoption of the Police (Scotland) Act, is a small ancient city, in the parish of its name. It is the capital of the western district of Perthshire, and lies 41 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 33 N.E. from Glasgow, 28 S.W. from Perth, 11 S.E. from Callander, and 4 S. from Doune, charmingly situated on the banks of the river Allan, which flows through a great part of the parish, and affords excellent sport to the angler, there being a good supply of trout, besides salmon and grilse in their season. Dunblane is much resorted to in the summer season as a watering place, there being an excellent mineral spring on the property of the Hon. Capt. Arthur H. Drummond, of Cromlix, in the vicinity of the town. This spring has been acquired by the Dunblane Hydropathic, an establishment capable of accommodating 200 visitors. The Scottish Central section of the Caledonian railway passes through and has a station in the town, and the Dunblane, Doune, and Callander branch commences here. Dunblane was formerly the see of a bishop, founded by David I., and the great object of attraction in the present day is what was once the Cathedral, the choir of which is now the parish church. In 1892 the Cathedral was entirely restored at a cost of £25,000. It is a large Gothic structure, with a steeple of modern erection, one hundred and twenty feet in height, standing on an eminence on the eastern bank of the Allan, overlooking the town. The town adjoining the church, from its being composed chiefly of old dignified-looking houses, exhibits the appearance of what is termed the "Close," or the precincts of the cathedral. The good and learned Leighton, whose fame is in all the churches, was at one time Bishop of Dunblane, and bequeathed his valuable library to the clergy of the diocese. The books are kept in a suitable building called the Leighton Library, to which the public have access on easy terms.

Dunblane is a place of limited trade, and not conspicuous as one of manufactures. Worst spinning is carried on very extensively by Messrs. Alexander Wilson & Co. at their mills, Springbank, which give employment to a great number of the inhabitants. There is also a small mill for the manufacture of woollen cloth, and others for wool spinning in the parish. In the High street are branches of the Bank of Scotland and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited. This place is the residence of a sheriff substitute and other functionaries. A sheriff court for the recovery of small debts and for ordinary business is held every Wednesday, and justice of peace courts occasionally. The court house and prison are modern buildings, convenient for their respective purposes. The places of worship are the parish church (before noticed), a Free church, a United Presbyterian, a handsome Episcopal church, and a Roman Catholic chapel. There are two public schools, and one belonging to the Episcopal church. The country to the south of the town is very beautiful, and is finely ornamented with plantations.

The ride from Dunblane to Stirling is much and justly admired. The vale of Strathallan, through which flows the river Allan, lies to the north and east of the town. The fields on the banks of the river are fertile, but as the grounds approach the hills they are of a moorish character, although excellently adapted for the purpose of pasture, the dairy produce of this district being in high repute. At the lower end of the town is the romantic walk of Kippenross, near to the end of which is a plane tree, supposed to be the largest in Scotland, the circumference of the trunk in the smallest part being nearly twenty feet where the branches separate fully twenty-seven feet, and close to the ground forty-two feet seven inches. The height of the tree is a hundred feet, and has attained the age, it is said, of over four hundred and seventy years. About half way between Dunblane and the Bridge of Allan is Keir House, the residence of Archibald Stirling, Esq. The grounds are laid out with great taste, and contain fine specimens of forest trees and ornamental flower gardens. They are kindly thrown open to visitors from two to five on Friday. On the river Allan, about two miles north of Dunblane, is the recently erected small village of ASHFIELD, where are situated extensive works belonging to the well-known firm of Messrs. Robert Pullar & Sons, calico printers, &c.

A few miles from the town is Sheriffmuir, on which a severe conflict took place in November, 1715, between the royal forces, under the Duke of Argyle, and the rebel army, commanded by the Earl of Mar. Here on the summit of the hill are some large stones enclosed by iron rails, said to be placed where the standard was erected. Prince Charles arrived in Dunblane on the 11th of September, 1745, on his way to the low country, and remained a night at the house of the Laird of Balhaldie. The room in which the prince held his levee, on the morning of his departure, is courteously shown to the inquiring visitor. Dunblane bestows the title of Viscount on the Duke of Leeds. There was formerly a market held here and numerous fairs, but they have all fallen into disuse. Dunblane parish has an area of 18,636 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 3,123, and in 1891, 3,220, of which the town numbered 2,186.

DUNKELD,

WITH THE PARISHES OF CAPUTH, DOWALLY AND LITTLE DUNKELD, AND THE VILLAGES OF BIRNAM, BUTTERSTONE, DALGUISE, DRUMOUR, GILLYBURN, MEIKLEOUR, MEIKLE TROCHRY, MURTHLY, SPITTALFIELD, INVER, STRATHBRAAN, AND TORWOOD.

DUNKELD is a small but interesting and handsome town and burgh of barony, in the united parishes of Dunkeld and Dowally, 57 miles N.N.W. from Edinburgh (by rail 60), 24 E. from Kenmore, 15 N.N.W. from Perth, and 13 W. from Blairgowrie; delightfully situated in the bosom of an amphitheatre of hills, at the spot where the Highlands and Lowlands appear to meet, and where the Tay first escapes from its mountain fastnesses to the smiling land to which it contributes so much additional fertility and beauty. The town is of great antiquity, and was the capital of ancient Caledonia. The monastery of the Culdees is noticed as early as 729, and is recorded to have been built by Constantine, third King of the Picts. David I., in 1127, converted it into a bishopric. The first bishop of this see whose name appears prominently in history is the heroic William Sinclair, who assumed the mitre in 1312. He built the choir, succeeding bishops adding other portions, until it was finished in 1460. It is stated that in 1560 it was destroyed and left a ruin by an order from the Privy Council of Scotland. In 1763 the Government gave £300 towards the restoration of the choir, and a further sum of £1,000 in 1815, to which the Duke of Athole added £5,000, for the purpose of converting it into a parish church. The other parts of the cathedral have been abandoned to the operations of time and the seasons, and have sunk into a state of dilapidation. In the early part of the sixteenth century the see of Dunkeld was held by the learned Gavin Douglas, a younger son of the Earl of Angus. The situation of the cathedral, in the midst of a fine grove on the left bank of the Tay, must highly interest the contemplative stranger. There is also a Free church, a neat and substantial edifice, erected in 1874, on the site of the old one, with tower and spire, which cost upwards of £2,000. The interior is ornamented by a handsome stained glass window, in memory of the Earl of Dalhousie, the whole of the funds being raised by public subscription. The scenery which surrounds Dunkeld has long been the subject of admiration. Nature has been bountiful to this district, and her favours were duly appreciated and skilfully assisted by the late noble proprietor, the Duke of Athole, who conducted his operations and embellishments with such consummate taste as to produce one of the most beautiful and picturesque retreats to be found in Scotland, and which has long been the resort of tourists and visitors. Excellent accommodation is furnished by two very extensive and superior hotels, the Duke of Athole's Arms and the Royal Hotel. The Bridge of Tay at this place is a magnificent structure of seven arches, the total span of which is 685 feet, its breadth 27 feet, and its greatest height from the foundation 54 feet. Its erection was commenced in 1805, and completed in 1809, at a cost of upwards of £30,000, £5,000 of which was contributed by Government, and the remainder disbursed by the late public spirited nobleman. The bridge was constructed chiefly on dry land, and the river afterwards turned to flow through its finely formed arches. The view from this bridge is, in every direction, remarkably fine. Near the town is a seat of the noble family of Athole, the gardens belonging to which, the cascades, the extensive pleasure grounds, and the lovely scenery are most attractive objects; among these Ossian's Hall, the Rumbling Bridge, and several falls of the river Bran, are pointed out to the visitor. In these grounds are two very fine trees called "the mother larches," being the first grown in Britain. They were planted in 1797, and are 100 feet high, one of them measuring 15 feet in circumference at three feet from the ground. A very handsome fountain was erected in 1866 by the inhabitants and a few friends as a mark of respect and esteem to George Augustus Frederick John, sixth Duke of Athole, who died in 1864. The manufacture of line goods was formerly the staple trade of Dunkeld, but has now become extinct. There are branches of two banking establishments settled here, namely, the Bank of Scotland and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited. Dunkeld is a burgh of barony, and as such is governed by a baron bailie, who is appointed by the Duke of Athole. A justice of the peace court is held for granting publicans' certificates, game dealers' licences, &c. James VI. made a grant for erecting a grammar school, called the Royal School of Dunkeld, which still exists. There is also a school for the education of females, a handsome building situated in the Market place, erected by the Duchess of Athole in 1853, at a cost of £1,200. The City Hall, in Athole street, is a neat stone building, furnished with a gallery, and capable of accommodating 350 persons. The funds were raised by the assistance of the present Duke of Athole, the gentry in the neighbourhood, and the inhabitants. The weekly market is held on Saturday, and the fairs on the 14th of February and the 5th of April; should any of these fall on Saturday, Sunday or Monday, the fairs take place on the following Tuesday; another is held on the second Tuesday in November. Population in 1881, 768, and in 1891, 740.

CAPUTH is an extensive parish and small village, 5 miles E. from Dunkeld, lying on the banks of the river Tay. Here is an Established church. BUTTERSTONE, SPITTALFIELD, and MEIKLEOUR are small villages in this parish, from 3 to 5½ miles distant. Acreage of parish, 19,493. Population in 1881, 2,096.

DOWALLY is a large parish, united with that of Dunkeld, situated about 5 miles N. from Dunkeld. The present church was built in 1818, nearly on the site of that erected by Bishop Brown. A number of old stones have been made use of in constructing the new building, amongst which is one bearing the arms of Bishop Brown, the original founder, a tombstone to the memory of one of the Dalziel family, and a stone in the shape of a bell. KINDALLACHAN is a small village in this parish. Acreage of the joint parishes, 9,456. Population in 1881, 791, and in 1891, 1,070.

LITTLE DUNKELD, contrary to its distinctive appellation, is an extensive parish, lying on the west or right bank of the Tay, opposite to Dunkeld, above described. The parish forms a kind of irregular triangle, and is disposed by nature into four districts. BIRNAM, DALGUISSE, GILLYBURN, INVER, MEIKLE TROCHRY, MURTHLY, DRUMOUR, STRATHBRAAN and TORWOOD are small villages in the parish of Little Dunkeld, situate from one to six miles distant. The first district is that of MURTHLY, extending from Kinclaven to the "Pass of Birnam." It includes the villages of GILLYBURN and MURTHLY, where there is a station on the Highland railway. The Perth District Asylum, adjoining the station, is a fine square building, surrounded by beautiful grounds, which are kept in order by the patients. The grand features of this part of the parish are the extensive and exquisite grounds of Murthly Castle, the seat of William Stewart Fotheringham, Esq., a fine structure in the Elizabethan style of architecture, the grounds being upwards of three square miles in extent. They contain avenues and terraces of the finest and rarest trees in the country. Besides Murthly Castle, this district contains Birnam Hall, the residence of Lady Stewart, and the charming shooting lodge of Rohallion, one of the most romantically-situated mansions in Perthshire. The soil of this district (all of which belongs to William Stewart Fotheringham, Esq.) is fertile and well cultivated; the surface of the country is beautifully varied, and the fields well enclosed. The second and central district of the parish is BIRNAM, in the midst of which Birnam Hill, rendered classic by Shakspeare in drama, and by Sir John Everett Millais, Bart., in art, rises in rude magnificence from the edge of the river. From the summit of Birnam Hill an unrivalled view is obtained in every direction, and its slops carries have been wrought with profit from an early period. At the base of the hill are situated the villages of TORWOOD and BIRNAM, while about a mile to the west is the village of INVER, the birthplace of the famous Scottish musician, Neil Gow, pleasantly situated at the confluence of the rivers Tay and Braan. Acreage of the parish, 45,000. Population in 1881, 2,175, and in 1891, 2,068.

BIRNAM is a beautiful modern village, about three quarters of a mile distant from Dunkeld. For its size it is very imposing, and the houses produce a pleasing and artistic effect from their architectural pretensions and regular appearance. Dunkeld station of the Highland railway is situated in Birnam. The Birnam Hotel, of which Mr. Edward Cesari is the proprietor, is the principal building. It is in the Saxon-Gothic style, with towers, and has an ecclesiastical and imposing effect. It contains a public hall—perhaps one of the finest in the kingdom—and is surrounded with fine pleasure-grounds. The Episcopal church (St. Mary's) is a handsome building in the Gothic style of architecture, with tower and bell. One of the features of Birnam is the new Institute, which includes a well-equipped reading room and library, recreation and refreshment rooms, public hall, and other accommodation. The Institute grounds enhance the amenity of the village, being neatly kept and furnished with seats under the shade of spreading beeches. Altogether the village of Birnam, with its excellent supply of water and gas and efficient system of drainage, added to the purity and salubrity of its atmosphere, presents an air of cleanliness, comfort and style that is not surpassed by any other in the country. In the immediate vicinity of Birnam there are a number of handsome mansions, conspicuous among which are St. Mary's Tower, the residence of the Duke of Rutland; and Erigmore, the seat of C. B. Logan, Esq., W.S., Edinburgh. Birnam is the centre of some of the most charming walks and drives in Perthshire, and is a favourite summer health resort. The third district of the parish of Little Dunkeld extends from Inver, along the banks of the Tay, to Grantully, a space of ten miles; here the fields are level, and the whole has the appearance of an almost continued series of beautiful gardens. It includes a stretch of fine country called "The Bishopric," and contains the village of DALGUISSE, where there is a station of the Highland railway, and near which are the mansions of Dalguise House and Kinnauld. BALNAGUARD is a village with a comfortable inn at the extreme end of the district. The fourth district is STRATHBRAAN, a valley about nine miles in length, through which flows the river Braan. In the lower portion the soil is fertile and well tilled, but the upper portion is poor and unproductive. Drumour is the autumn residence of Mr. Barclay Field, whose shootings extend over a vast expanse of moor and mountain. Near the centre of Strathbraan is the village of TROCHRY, containing a neat Free church and the ruins of a famous old castle, once a seat of the Earls of Gowrie. At the upper extremity of the parish lies the village of AMULREE. The parish of Little Dunkeld is traversed by the military road from Perth to Inverness, and by the Highland railway which intersects the parish throughout its entire length, about 14 miles. The population of the village in 1881 was 471, and in 1891, 484.

DUNNING.

FORTEVIOT, FORGANDENNY, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUNNING is a rather extensive parish, containing a neat village of its name, the latter 9 miles s.w. from Perth, and 5 s. from Auchterarder; situate near the centre of the district, on the banks of the Dunning water (a tributary of the Earn), half a mile north of the base of the Ochil range of hills, and about 2 miles from the river Earn. The village, of which the Right Hon. Lord Rollo, of Duncrub Park, is the superior, contains a number of good houses. The places of worship are Established, Free, and United Presbyterian churches and one for the Episcopalian. The steeple of the parish church is of very ancient date, and is supposed to be of Pictish origin. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, is established in the village. This place was destroyed by fire by the Earl of Mar's army, on the retreat from Sheriffmuir to Perth. A thorn, planted at that time in the centre of the ruins, is still to be seen, and from its shape, size and appearance at once attracts the stranger's attention. It is recorded that at the configuration of the village only one house escaped (which is still standing), and that by an ingenious device on the part of its owner, a female, who, while the rest of the cottages were in flames, threw parcels of wet straw and any refuse of flax on the fire within the house, which raised such a smoke round this particular dwelling, that, believing it to be in a fair way of demolition, the soldiers did not molest it. A corn market is held every Wednesday. The Caledonian railway has a station about two miles from the village. The parish comprises 14,585 acres, and contained in 1881 a population of 1,635, and in 1891, 1,845.

FORTEVIOT is a parish, 3 miles E. from Dunning and 7 W. from Perth, in the district of Strathearn and the greater portion in the vale of Earn, the river of that name passing through it. The middle portion is beautifully wooded and enclosed, and is intersected by the May, which joins the Earn nearly opposite Dupplin Castle. The village of Forteviot, which is situated on the right bank of the last-named stream, is an ancient capital of the Pictish kingdom, but nothing now remains to mark a royal seat. At Bankhead, near Dupplin Castle, an ancient cross may be seen, and one also on the opposite height of Dronech, both of which are supposed to mark the approaches to Holly Hill, where, in the time of Charles I., vestiges of a palace were in existence. It was on the heights here the battle of Dupplin was fought. The river May before-mentioned winds through the verdant knolls of the Ochils, and touches through the picturesque grounds of Invermay, flowing on and forming several beautiful falls, until it becomes lost for a time in the intricate course of the Hummel Burn, a cataract at Muckersie Linn, that tumbles for more than thirty feet in a perpendicular fall into a romantic glen. About three hundred yards from the village is a station belonging to the Caledonian railway. The parish, which has an acreage of 7,785, contains an Established church and a Board school and in 1881 had a population of 618, and in 1891, 539.

FORGANDENNY is a parish and a village, the latter about 4 miles s. from Perth, 5 s. from Dunning, and 3 W. from Bridge of Earn. The village is very small, and the parish contains Established, Free and United Presbyterian churches, and two Board schools. There is a station on the Caledonian line, about one mile distant. Acreage, 8,946; population in 1881, 627, and in 1891, 574.

ERROL,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ABERNYTE, INCHTURE, KILSPINDIE, KINNAIRD, SAINT MADDOES, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ERROL is a parish in the Carse of Gowrie, 5½ miles in length and nearly 3 in breadth, stretching across the Carse from the foot of the hills to the banks of the Tay. The soil is rich and fertile, and under most productive tillage; it is also highly favourable to the growth of fruit trees. The country is intersected with small tracts of water called "pows," collected chiefly from the trenches opened for draining the grounds. As the tide and current in the Tay were making great encroachments, the proprietors of the land found it necessary to build strong walls to arrest their usurpation. It is recorded that this district receives the name of Errol, signifying an eastern landmark, from the circumstances of the family of Hay, who, having fought gallantly at Luncarty, received for their services from the king a gift of as much land in the Carse of Gowrie as a hawk flew over. Be this account correct or merely a traditional legend, it is certain that the noble family of Hay take the title of Earl of Errol from the appellation of the parish. The small village named after it is 10 miles E. from Perth, occupying a beautiful situation on a rising ground, embowered in trees, commanding a prospect of the Tay and Carse almost as far east as Dundee. A rivulet flows past to the Tay, and forms a small harbour at its mouth; and about a mile from the village is a station, on the Caledonian railway. The village is well-lighted. The parish church is a very handsome building, on a commanding site, the tower of which may be seen at a considerable distance; there is also a substantial and capacious Free church, and one for United Pre-byterians. Acreage of the parish, 9,507; population in 1851, 2,421, and in 1851, 2,158.

ABERNYTE, INCHTURE, KILSPINDIE, KINNAIRD and ST. MADDOES are all parishes in the Carse of Gowrie, and varying in distance from 5 to 9 miles E. from Perth.

FORTINGAL,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF KINLOCH-RANNOCH AND KELTNEY BURN.

FORTINGAL is a parish in the district of Breadalbane. The village, a small one, is 84 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 12 N.W. from Perth, 15½ N.W. from Killin, 5½ S.W. from Dalh., and 5 N.W. from Kenmore, situated on the left bank of the river Lyon, about 3 miles from its junction with the Tay. The parish lies in the midst of the Grampians, and is only useful for pasture. Including the abolished parish of Kilschonan, it extends 37 miles in length, by 17 in breadth, occupying a large tract of Highland territory in the north-west part of the county. The district abounds in lakes, rivers, and woods; the chief of the former being Loch Rannoch, about 11 miles in length, whose banks are finely wooded. A yew tree in the burial ground is said to be upwards of 2,500 years old. There are the remains of a Roman camp on the Haugh of Fortingal. Not far from the southern bank of the lake are the barracks called GEORGETOWN. In this district rises Schiehallion, one of the highest mountains in Scotland, where Dr. Macallister, astronomer royal, some years ago made his observations on the powers of attraction. This parish is so wild and mountainous that prior to the year 1745 the civil power could not reach it. It was the receptacle of the freebooter, who laid the country under that species of contribution so well known by the name of "black-mail." The inhabitants are now steady and industrious. Fairs are held in the village in December. Acreage of Fortingal parish, 196,693; population in 1881, 1,690.

KELTNEY BURN is a small village in the parish of Fortingal. There is a mill here, engaged in the manufacture of tweeds, clan tartans, &c. Aberfeldy is the nearest railway station, six miles distant. Population returned with the parish.

KINLOCH-RANNOCH is a small village in the above parish. There is a handsome granite monument in the village, erected by subscription, to the memory of the Gaelic poet, Dugald Buchanan. Population returned with the parish.

KENMORE,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF ACHARN.

THE parish of KENMORE lies in the Highland district of Breadalbane, surrounding the large and beautiful lake of Loch Tay, which is sixteen miles in length, varying from one to two in breadth. The waters of the lake, which seldom or never freeze, abound with salmon and other fish. The clean little village of Kenmore, with its kirk and white cottages, occupies an eminence at the north-east end of the loch, close by the point where it opens into a river, over which is thrown a handsome bridge of five arches. The village is 80 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 40 N.W. from Perth, 24 W. from Dunkeld, 16 N.E. from Killin, and 5 S.E. from Fortingal. In the vale below the village are the park and castle of Taymouth, the seat of the Marquis of Breadalbane. The mansion some years since was much enlarged and improved, and it now ranks amongst the most elegant modern castellated mansions in Scotland. This is a favourite point in a tour of the Highlands, hence is much visited in summer. The district comprises objects both sublime and beautiful; amongst the former is the majestic mountain Ben Lawers, which rises on the north-east side of the loch to the height of 3,934 feet. The places of worship are the Established, Free and Episcopal churches. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in March and on the 2nd of November (both old style), and the 28th of June, the 26th July, the 17th of September, and the 24th December. Aberfeldy is the nearest railway station, six miles distant. The parish contains an area of 67,196 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,508.

ACHARN is a small village in Kenmore parish, situated about 2 miles S.W. from the village of Kenmore, on the east side of Loch Tay. Near the village, in a woody glen, are the celebrated Falls of Acharn. The Breadalbane family have built a grotto (called the "Hermitage") opposite to the greatest fall, where the water suddenly precipitates itself over a projecting rock a distance of about 250 feet. Aberfeldy is the nearest railway station, about eight miles distant. Population returned with the parish.

KILLIN,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CLIFTON, CRANLARICH, AND TYNDRUM.

KILLIN is a mountainous and extensive parish in the Highland district of Breadalbane; the village, a rapidly growing one, is 74 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 40 N.N.W. from Stirling, 27 W. by N. from Crieff, 22½ N. from Callander, 16 S.W. from Kenmore, and 8 N. from Lochearnhead, occupying a delightful and picturesque situation at the west end of the celebrated Loch Tay, and near the confluence of the rivers Lochy and Dochart with the waters of the lake. The Callander and Oban branch of the Caledonian railway is connected by the new Killin line, by which Kenmore is brought into nearer contact through the Loch Tay steamers. This line is one of the finest in Scotland for grandeur and scenery. Anglers residing at the hotels have trout fishing free of charge in Loch Tay, which is one of the largest and most beautiful lochs in Scotland, and in point of salmon fishing, the season for which opens on 5th February, it is surpassed by none. Auchmore House, a fine seat of the Marquis of Breadalbane, is situated at the head of the loch on the south side, and opposite, on the north side, is the very old picturesque burying ground and mausoleum of the family. The ivy-covered ruins of Finlurg Castle, one of the oldest seats of the Barons of Breadalbane, are close to the vault. The largest vine in the British Isles is to be seen at Auchmore gardens. It is a black Hamburg, covers 475 square yards of glass, and grows from a single stem which measures 22 inches at a height of 3 feet from the ground. The falls of Lochy are about 3 miles from Killin, and are well worth a visit. The scenery between Killin and Kenmore can be seen to best advantage from the deck of one of the Loch Tay steamers. The west, or Killin end, is grand and wild, the mountains rising to a great height, and serrated into many jagged and fantastic sky-lines. Some rare ferns and cairngorm stones are found here. About midway down the loch, Ben Lawers, one of the highest mountains in Scotland, throws up its giant form, offering to the botanist a storehouse of most interesting alpine plants, and to the mountaineer a glorious prospect from the summit on a clear day. Toward the Kenmore end the scenery is of a different nature and very beautiful.

On a small island, formed by two branches of the river, and much in the shape of a coffin, is the burial place of the McNab clan. On one of the trees of the island may be seen a branch, which, severed from its parent stem by a storm in February, 1806, attached itself to a neighbouring tree, and is now growing with its branches downwards. A small eminence in the neighbourhood of Killin is pointed out as the place of sepulture of the famed Highland hero Fingal. The village is noted for the picturesque beauty of its situation, and, like Kenmore, is a favorite point of tour of the central Highlands. To view the scenery of this district to advantage, the traveller is advised to take the road on the south-west side of the lake; and in passing down its bank it is worth while to stop at a little at a woody glen, where the faculty of Breadalbane have built a grotto opposite a cascade, which is very well deserving of attention. Fairs are held on the third Tuesday in January, the 5th and 12th of May, the Friday before Doomsday first of November fair, and the first Tuesday in November (old style). Acreage of Killin parish, 96,926; population in 1881, 1,277.

CLIFTON is a small village in the western part of the parish, situated within half a mile of Tyndrum railway station, and containing a post and telegraph office. Population returned with the parish.

CRANLARICH and TYNDRUM are stations on the Callander and Oban railway, and each contain an excellent hotel.

KINCARDINE,

WITH THE PARISHES OF TULLIALLAN AND CULROSS.

KINCARDINE (or Kincardine-on-Forth) is a seaport town and burgh of barony, in the parish of TULLIALLAN, 32 miles s. from Perth, 15 w. from North Queensferry, 10 w. from Dunfermline, 6 w. from Torryburn, and 5 n. from Alloa; situated in the south western part of the county of Fife, on the north bank of the Firth of Forth. At one time this place was called West Pans, from the salt works established in it, but these have long ceased to exist. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, is established here, and there are rope and twine and worsted and woollen manufactories. There is a commodious harbour and an excellent quay, which, together with the good anchorage ground on the Forth, render this haven an eligible refuge for vessels in distress; the harbour will admit vessels of all burthen. The town, although irregularly built and the streets narrow, contains some good houses. Of late years the trade has considerably decreased. The Established church erected some years ago, is a very handsome and ornamental structure; the other places of worship are a Free church and a United Presbyterian church. The old church remains standing in the burial ground, and is an interesting ruin, the steeple, however, being perfect. The principal seat in the district is Tulliallan Castle from which an extensive view of the surrounding country is commanded. A fair is held in Kincardine on the last Friday in July (old style). The parish of Tulliallan contains 3,586 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 2,207, and in 1891, 2,189.

CULROSS is an ancient town and representative burgh in the parish of its name, 4 miles s.e. from Kincardine, situated partly on the acclivity of a hill rising from the Forth, the principal street running north from the shore. An extensive traffic in salt and coal was at one time carried on here, and one hundred and seventy foreign vessels have been at one time in the roads. The Earl of Dunmore erected some very extensive works for extracting tar, naphtha and volatile salt from coal, but the speculation proving unproductive it was abandoned. Culross was erected into a royal burgh by James VI. in 1588; it has a provost, two bailies, a treasurer and councillors. It unites with Stirling, Queensferry, Inverkeithing and Dunfermline, under the style of the Stirling burghs, in returning one member to Parliament. The present representative is the Right Hon. Henry

Campbell-Bannerman. The town and its vicinity possess many objects of antiquity. In 1217 a monastery was founded on the rising ground behind the town by Malcolm, Thane of Fife; considerable remains of this structure are yet extant. On the north side was the abbey church, which had a tower in the centre; the latter is still entire, as is also a part of the church, which is now used for public service. In a recess of a mausoleum, erected in 1642 in honour of Sir George Bruce, are recumbent figures of Sir George and his lady, in beautiful white marble, and along a low settle are arranged their eight children in a kneeling posture. To the west of the town, on the bank of the Forth, is the ruin of Duninmarle (the castle near the sea), an ancient stronghold of the Macduffs, and according to tradition the scene of the murder of Lady Macduff and her children. The present house of Duninmarle is a handsome modern edifice, which owes its striking castellated appearance to the late Mrs. Sharp Erskine, who also erected in the grounds a beautiful mortuary chapel, within which she is interred. There is a museum in the house, wherein are some beautiful paintings, rare old china and other articles of vertu, to which, and the extensive grounds, the public are admitted on certain days of the week. Near the abbey church is a school, endowed by the late Patrick Geddes, Esq., at which twenty children receive free education. The building having become too small, the late Miss Davidson, of the Park, erected another school, at a cost of £1,500, and presented it to the trustees. There is also a public school within the burgh. The acreage of Culross parish is 7,584, and its population in 1881 was 1,180, the burgh containing 349 of this number, and in 1891, 1,096.

KIRKMICHAEL,

WITH BALLINTUIM AND SPITAL OF GLENSHEE.

KIRKMICHAEL is an extensive parish in the north-eastern corner of the county, adjoining Aberdeenshire on the north and the county of Forfar on the east. The parish, which is seventeen miles in length, and from six to seven in breadth, comprises the greater part of Strathardle, and is intersected by the river Ardie, which is crossed by a bridge of two arches, and along the left bank of which an excellent road leads from Pitlochry to Blairgowrie. Ardie Grave, near Dirnanan, nine feet in length, has been reverently preserved, and handed down to posterity, favouring the supposition that this part of the country was inhabited by a race of Pictish. From the Druidical remains in the parish, it is supposed that Strathardle was the residence of an arch-druid;
of these relics the principal are a rocking stone near Dalruizion, a supposed Druidical altar near Balvarran, and numerous circles and cairns. A military way from Coupar-Angus to Fort George traverses the northern part of the parish, by the Spittal of Glenshee.
In the Strathardle portion of the parish stands the village of Kirk, 72 miles N. from Edinburgh, 29 N. from Perth, 12½ E. from Pitlochry, and 18 N.W. from Blairgowrie. There are E-established and Free churches, and a constabulary station in the village. Population in 1881 was 849, and in 1891 (including the new boundaries), 935.

SPITAL OF GLENSHEE is a scattered district in the parish of Kirkmichael, 14 miles N. from the latter place, and 20 N. from Blairgowrie. There is an Established church and school here. At CRAY, in this district, is a handsome Free church. Population in 1891, 163

BALLINTUIM is a small village in the parish of Kirkmichael. It is three miles east from Kirkmichael, and 10 miles N. from Blairgowrie.
The scenery around is very charming and interesting. There is a public school in the village. Population returned with the parish.

MEIGLE AND ALYTH JUNCTION.

MEIGLE is a parish in the district of Strathmore—the village, or small town, an ancient one, and the seat of a presbytery, is 61 miles N. from Edinburgh, 18 N. by E. from Perth, 13½ S.W. from Dundee, 9 S.W. from Kirriemuir, 7½ W. from Glamis, 5 N.E. from Coupar-Angus, and 4 S. from Alyth; pleasantly situated on the banks of the Isla, and about a mile from Alyth Junction, on the North-eastern section of the Caledonian railway. A branch from Alyth Junction to Alyth passes close to Meigle village, and has a station here. The parish, 4½ miles in length and 2 in breadth, is fertile and well cultivated, and, besides the Isla, is watered by the Dean, which is the northern boundary of the district. There are some beautiful seats in this part of the country, particularly Belmont Castle, on the estate of that name, the property of the Right Hon. Henry Campbell-Bannerman, M.P., the gardens and fine plantations of which render it the most delightful residence in all Strathmore. In one of the enclosures is pointed out a tumulus, where, it is said, the murderous Macbeth was deprived of his usurped power and his life in his fatal encounter with Macduff. A number of stones and monuments, supposed to be of Pictish origin, are also to be seen in the vicinity. A new parish church has been erected on the site of the old one (which was destroyed by fire in March, 1869), at a cost of about £2,500. It was opened for public worship in July, 1870. In the churchyard are some very old monuments, which tradition asserts to be the grave of Queen Vaurora, the faithful wife of King Arthur. The figures which, it is said, once delineated the history of Vaurora, are so defaced and dilapidated as to render all attempts at deciphering their meaning a fruitless task. About a mile N.E. of the village, at the junction of the Isla and the Dean, are the remains of a Roman camp, called Cardean or Cardean, and noticed by General Roy in his work on the Roman antiquities of Scotland. There is a good hotel, viz., the Kinloch Arms, which offers excellent accommodation to visitors, with fishing on the Dean and Isla free. A cattle market is held fortnightly, and fairs on the last Wednesday in June, and on the last Wednesday in October. Acreage of the parish, 3,980; population in 1881, 696, and in 1891, 660.

ALMOND BANK, GLENALMOND, PITCAIRN GREEN, TIBBERMUIR, AND ABERDALGIE.

METHVEN is a very neat village and parish, the former 6 miles
w. from Perth, situated on the high road to Crieff, from which it is distant 11 miles N.E. It possesses a good subscription library.
The Perth, Crieff and Methven railway terminates here. The ancient church of Methven was collegiate, being founded in 1495, for a provost and seven prebendaries, by Walter Stuart, Earl of Athol, one of the youngest sons of Robert II. About a mile from the village is Methven Castle, the residence of William Smythe, Esq., distinguished in Scottish history as the place where King Robert was defeated by the English army, under the Earl of Pembroke, in 1306. But perhaps the most interesting object in the parish is the grave of the celebrated Bessie Bell and Mary Gray, whose beauty and seclusion from the world are the subject of an admired Scottish melody. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture. Acreage of the parish, 12,911. Population in 1881, 1,910, and in 1891, 1,619, the village numbering 657.

ALMOND BANK is a village in Methven parish, situated about 4 miles N.W. from Perth, and is a station on the Perth, Methven and Crieff line of railway. There is a public school in the village, which later in 1881 contained a population of 492, and in 1891, 943.

Trinity College, GLENALMOND, on the banks of the Almond, is 10 miles from Perth and 4 from the Methven railway station. It was projected in 1841, and opened in 1847, being founded for the double purpose of supplying a proper collegiate training to candidates for holy orders in the Scottish Episcopal church, and of establishing in Scotland a public school after the general model of those in England.
The theological college has since been removed to Edinburgh. The site on which the college stands was presented by the late George Patten, Esq., of the Cairnies. The funds for the buildings were raised by general subscription throughout England and Scotland.
Among the most munificent benefactors were the Duke of Buccleugh, the late Sir John Gladstone, Bart., the Right Hon. W. E.
Gladstone, and the Right Rev. Charles Wordsworth, the first warden of the college. The chapel, a building in the decorated style of Gothic architecture, 136 feet long by 52 wide, with a height of 70 feet, was erected at a cost of more than £8,000, at the sole expense of the late Right Rev. C. Wordsworth. The council consists of sixteen members, namely, the seven Scotch bishops, two presbyters, and seven laymen. The resident masters are a warden, seven assistant masters, and a medical officer; music is taught by the organist.

Tibbermuir (or Tibbermore) is a parish and a manufacturing district, having within it the extensive bleach fields of Messrs. Lumsden & Mackenzie. The ancient castle of Huntingtower is in Tibbermuir, and is worthy of notice as being formerly the seat of the Gowrie family, and the place where James VI. was confined by the Earl of Gowrie and other conspirators in the year 1582. Tibbermuir has given its name to the first battle that was fought between the Marquis of Montrose and the Covenanters, though the conflict occurred more within the parish of Aberdalgie; in this sanguinary engagement the covenanting forces were totally routed. Acreage, 6,140. Population in 1881, 1,888.

ABERDALGIE, a parish, is washed on the south by the Earn, which here affords excellent fishing. The parish abounds in freestone, and much of the land is under plantation. Dupplin Castle, a seat of the Earl of Kinnoull, is in the parish. Perth is the nearest railway station, 3½ miles distant. Acreage, 4,165. Population in 1881, 297, and in 1891, 280.

PITCAIRN GREEN is a village in the parish of Redorton, situated on the north bank of the Almond, about 4½ miles N.W. from Perth.
At Pitcairnfield and Cromwell Park are extensive bleach works.
There are a Free Church and a Board school in the village, and a United Presbyterian church at Bridgeton. Almond Bank is the nearest railway station, about one mile and a quarter distant. Population in 1881, 801, and in 1891, 282.

MUTHILL AND ARDOCH,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF BRACO AND GREENLOANING.

MUTHILL is an extensive parish, lying on the borders of the Highland district, on the right bank of the Earn. The village is 19 miles N. from Stirling, 16 S.W. from Perth, and 3 S. from Crieff; and is situate on the great military road from Dunblane to Inverness by Tummel Bridge. About a mile to the westward stands Drummond Castle, the ancient seat of the family of Perth, now the residence of Lord Willoughby de Eresby; it is finely seated on a rock at the head of the vale of Stratharn, and attracts the attention and admiration of every stranger from the beautiful prospect it commands. There is a church, in ruins, said to have been built in 1419; the tower appears to be of an earlier date, and is doubtless of Pictish origin. In the village a church was erected in 1828. In the churchyard there is a fine monument to the memory of the Rev. William Hailey, the first Presbyterian minister of the parish. A Free church and an Episcopal church are the other places of worship, and connected with the churches are schools and a joint library. The Crieff Junction railway passes through the parish, and has a station a mile and a half from the village. The principal objects of interest in the parish, particularly to an antiquary, are two Roman camps, one at Stragath, and the other at Ardoch, a parish constituted in 1857, six miles from Muthill, the latter being considered one of the most perfect and interesting in Britain. The area of this camp is an oblong of one hundred and forty yards, by one hundred and twenty-five within the lines; the "general's quarter," which is a regular square of twenty yards each side, rises above the level of the camp, and contains the foundation of a house ten yards by seven. There are two other encampments adjoining, which have a communication with each other. Many years ago various interesting relics were brought to light from beneath these ancient fortifications, such as Roman spears, helmets, fragments of bridle, and other articles; these lay at the house of Ardoch for a considerable period, but were all carried off by some soldiers in the Duke of Argyll's army after the battle of Sheriffmuir in 1715, and could never be recovered. Muthill parish embraces an area of 21,916 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,702, and in 1891, 1,622. Acreage of Ardoch parish, 21,127; population in 1881, 1,102, and in 1891, 959.

BRACO is a village in the parish of Ardoch, 6 miles S.W. from Muthill. It contains an Established and a Free church, and a public school. Greenloaning is the nearest railway station, one mile distant.

GREENLOANING is a small village, also in the parish of Ardoch, 5 miles S.W. from Muthill. It is a station on the Scottish Central section of the Caledonian line, and contains a United Presbyterian church and a public school.

PERTH,

WITH THE PARISHES OF KINFAUNS AND KINNOULL, AND THE VILLAGES OF CRAIGEND AND GLENCARSE.

PERTH, an ancient city, a royal burgh, seat of a synod and presbytery, and capital of the county to which it gives its name, is 46 miles N. from Edinburgh, 62 N.E. from Glasgow, 22 S.W. from Dundee, 15 S. from Dunkeld, and 16 S. from Blairgowrie. The city is situated at the opening of an extensive plain, nearly surrounded by picturesque hills, having in the distance a view of the sublime amphitheatre of the Grampians; and bounded on the north and south by two beautiful meadows, called the North and South Inches, the former containing one hundred acres, and the latter seventy-two; both ornamented with noble trees, and watered by the Tay, which occasionally overflows them. These Inches are devoted to the use and recreation of the inhabitants. The Tay is one of the finest rivers in the kingdom, and is celebrated for its picturesque scenery during its whole course, and for the value of its salmon fisheries. It is recorded that when Agricola's army saw this delightful plain and superb river, they exclaimed, as with one voice, Ecce Tiber, Ecce Campus Martius!—"Behold the Tiber! Behold the Field of Mars!" Agricola pitched his tent in the middle of that field, on the spot where the city now stands. At one time the traces of a fortification, called Cromwell's Fort, were visible on the South Inch, but now handsome buildings have been erected on part of the space so occupied. Perth for a long period held the rank of capital of Scotland, was the residence of its kings and principal nobles, and the seat of its parliaments. It appears that it also bore the name of St. Johnstown, from its ancient church dedicated to St. John. At the early period when Scotch kings succeeded to the Pictish throne, the church and bridge of Perth are supposed to have been consecrated to St. John the Baptist, as the tutelary saint, and consequently obtained the name of St. John's Town, but was not recognised by that name in any of the public documents of the period. Fordun, in his history, remarks that he had found in some ancient writings that the town of St. John, now called Perth, was priorly Bertha, the contraction being Berth or Bert; and as the letters B and P are used in the Gaelic language indifferently, it may naturally be presumed that the Highlanders changed the pronunciation of it to Perth; and from this circumstance, it is very probable, the present name of the place was derived; indeed, at the present time, the word Perth is pronounced by the Highlanders Peirt or Peart. The approach to Perth by the Edinburgh road is very picturesque, and the descent to the South Inch terminates in a fine avenue of trees, extending to the town. At the southern extremity of this avenue stands the general prison for Scotland, built by Government in 1812, for the reception of prisoners of war. It was wholly rebuilt and remodelled in 1842; it is now occupied as a convict prison, and more extensive buildings erected for the purpose. The city itself is large and well built; the principal streets are long, well paved, and gas-lighted. At the east end of Marshall place, and forming the extreme south-eastern angle of the city, stands a fine architectural ornament, the water reservoir designed by Dr. Anderson, formerly rector of the Academy, and erected under his immediate superintendence; he also devised the scheme for the supply of pure water. In all wells sunk within or near the town the water was strongly impregnated with salts, and consequently ill adapted for culinary purposes or cleanness; the saline fluid flowing in much faster from the neighbouring high grounds than the soft water from the river. To obviate this Dr. Anderson devised the plan for excavating a filtering bed, 300 feet long, in the gravel, in the upper end of Friarton Island, which, having a branch of the river flowing on either side, secretes only the water of the Tay, and produces an unlimited quantity of this indispensable element, pure, soft, and limpid at all times and seasons; this is conveyed to the reservoir by means of a suction pipe, of great power, below the bed of the principal branch of the river, and thrown up into the tank by two steam engines, each of ten horse power. The project has been so successful that works upon the same principle have been carried into effect in Berlin and Paris. The expense of this work was defrayed by an assessment or water rate on real rents above a certain amount. From the increase of inhabitants, the extension of the royalty, and numerous villas having been erected in the vicinity, a Water Act received the sanction of Parliament, and is now in full operation. By this Act the present system has been extended to all parts of the city and suburbs, affording to the community an unlimited supply of pure water. At the public baths every description of bath may be used at a very low charge. Opposite the North Inch, and fronting the Tay, is an elegant row of houses called Rose terrace; in the centre are erected the Public Seminaries (noticed hereafter). At the south end of Rose terrace is a handsome range of houses called Athole crescent. The range of villas on St. Leonard's bank, skirting the western boundary of the South Inch, at the summit of a gentle elevation, is very pleasing. In addition to these, the whole of the tasteful erections in King street and King's place, Kinnoull street, Athole street, Charlotte place, and Barossa place, have arisen within fifty years. Adjoining the North Inch is a bridge which crosses the Tay; this fine structure, elegant though unadorned, is built in a most substantial manner. Its original narrowness admitted of a footpath on one side only; but in 1871 it was widened at a cost of over £2,000, by the addition of cast-iron footways, with Caithness pavement and balustrades. This bridge is reckoned one of Smeaton's most successful works. More recently many old buildings on the west bank of the river have been demolished, and a new street called Tay street has been formed, extending from the bridge southward to the Dundee railway bridge. Many buildings have been erected in this street, including a savings bank, a Free church, an elegant building, with a spire; the Victoria Buildings, which include offices where the Government officials are located, and others. Immediately adjoining the bridge is the suburb of Bridgend, leading to Kinnoull Hill, whose summit, at the distance of a mile and a half, can be most agreeably ascended by various pleasant walks. The height of the precipice of Kinnoull Hill is above six hundred feet perpendicular, and affords an enchanting prospect.

The noble river that flows at the base of this towering cliff, the hills and more concentrated objects in the foreground, and the grandeur of the mountainous perspective, present a panorama rarely excelled. Near the eastern declivity of this remarkable cliff stands the beautiful castle of Kinfauns, in the centre of the delightful demesne of the same name, so richly embellished by the late Lord Gray. On the eastern bank of the river, about two miles above Perth, stands Scone Palace. The original edifice, of historical notoriety, has been replaced by a modern pile of buildings, surrounded by extensive pleasure grounds, highly embellished by wood and water. At a short distance from the palace is the chapel, also rebuilt; it is environed by majestic trees, which give it an air of pleasing solemnity. Before the reign of King James, the coronation of the kings of Scotland was solemnised in the palace of Scone. The Earl of Mansfield is hereditary keeper of this palace, and proprietor of the estate.

The public buildings in Perth display much taste and spirit. The most prominent are the County Buildings. This structure, completed after a design by Mr. Smart, is situated in Tay street, on the bank of the Tay. The front is embellished by an elegant portico in the centre, and twelve massive fluted columns, which support a beautiful pediment. From the entrance hall a passage leads to the county hall, which is a fine room, 68 feet by 40, and occupies the south wing; the centre contains a commodious justiciary hall of semicircular form, with a spacious gallery. The remainder of the building on the same floor includes the sheriff court and room, sheriff clerk's office, and an arched fire-proof room where the records of the town are deposited; above is a spacious hall and card room, &c. This building having been found to afford insufficient accommodation, an addition was erected in 1868, on the side of South street. The Perth Boys' and Girls' Religious Society Hall, erected in 1881, at a cost of about £3,200, will accommodate 600 to 700 children, and contains, besides the hall, directors' room, two large class rooms, lady workers' room, and other conveniences. The Perthshire Natural History Museum has, exclusive of the museum hall, a large lecture room, library, and laboratory. These buildings, forming one construction, between 200 and 300 feet in length, are built in the Scottish baronial style of architecture, from the designs of Mr. James Young, architect, of Perth. The Municipal Buildings, erected in 1881, at a cost of £13,000, are situated at the east end of High street, and have a neat and handsome appearance; they are in the Tudor style of architecture, from the design of Mr. Helton, of Perth, are a great addition to the public buildings of the city, and, having a frontage to the river, form, in conjunction with the above, an ornament to this locality. They contain the offices of the city clerk, chamberlain, registrar, assessor, police superintendent, treasurer to the police commissioners, and gas offices. The burgh court room, which has its principal entrance from Tay street, is on the first floor above the police office, and communicating therewith. The council chamber, or Commissioners' Hall, is considered the most perfect of its kind in Scotland; it occupies the principal portion of the building, and is entered from High street; it is lighted by large mullioned and transomed windows which have been gratuitously filled with stained glass illustrative of personages in Sir Walter Scott's novel, "The Fair Maid of Perth." A panelled dado, 6 feet high, is carried round the room. The City Hall, at the west end of St. John's church, erected by the town, is one of the most capacious public rooms in the provinces, seating 1,500 persons. It is open for public meetings on the payment of moderate fees on application to the City Chamberlain.

Perth has long been noted for its dyeworks and for the manufacture of inks, but of late it has also become famous for the manufacture of gauge glasses, which are sent to all parts of the world. There are also extensive works for the manufacture of linen and jute, wire, woolsens, &c.; brewing, tanning, iron founding, rope and sail making, and other branches of industry and skill are also pursued, whilst the coal, corn and timber trades employ in the aggregate a considerable capital. The city possesses extensive railway communication by means of the Caledonian, North British and Highland railways. There are eight banking establishments settled in Perth, exclusive of one for savings. The hotels are of a highly respectable character. The Royal George Hotel, in George street; The Station Hotel, General station; the Salutation, in South street; Royal British and the Queen's (opposite the railway station, and the St. Leonard's Hotel, Leonard street) are comfortable and well-conducted establishments. Vessels of 200 tons burthen, owing to skilful dredging, can deliver and receive cargoes at the harbour; and a steamer passes frequently between Perth and Dundee.

The government of the city is vested in a lord provost, four bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and nineteen councillors. The council thus consists of twenty-six members, all of whom, with the exception of the dean of guild, are, since the passing of the Reform Bill of 1867, elected by household suffrage. The elective constituency is divided into four wards. The dean of guild is a member of council ex officio, and is chosen by the Guildry Incorporation; the lord provost and magistrates are elected by the councillors from amongst themselves. The council meets on the first Monday in every month; a sheriff court is held every Tuesday and Friday during session, and two courts at least in each vacation. The police of the city are under the charge of a superintendent, and the quiet and good order of the town is materially promoted by the power the magistrates have of summary punishment for petty offenders. The police, lighting, cleansing, paving, &c. are under the charge of the Town Council Commissioners, under the General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act, 1862. Perth was constituted a royal burgh, with confirmation of all its former privileges, in the year 1210, by William the Lion. James VI. accepted the municipal office of provost of the city, and partook at the Cross of the festivities which were prepared for that extraordinary occasion. The city returns one member to the Imperial Parliament, William Whitelaw, Esq., being the present representative.

During recent years some beautiful churches have been erected in Perth. St. John's church is a very ancient structure, and supposed to be one of the first churches built of stone in this country; it was originally erected in the form of a cross, and called the Kirk of the Holy Cross of Saint Johnston. Although it has been almost entirely remodelled by alterations at different periods, enough of the ancient part remains to testify that it was once a very fine edifice. Some extensive repairs have greatly improved its external appearance in later times, and while in former times the interior was in one, it is now divided to accommodate three congregations—the East, West and Middle. On the outside of the tower are affixed a set of musical bells covered by a kind of portico, and a singular looking spire surmounts the whole. The great reformer Knox thundered forth his declamations within this venerable pile. At the extremity of High street, in Methven street, stands St. Paul's church, a more modern and not inelegant structure of stone, with a substantial steeple. St. Leonard's church a modest structure, erected in King street in 1835—the expense being defrayed by joint-stock shares and private subscriptions—is incorporated with the Establishment. St. John's Episcopal church, Princes street, stands on the site of a former chapel; it was originally the only Episcopal church in Perth. It is a handsome edifice in the early English style, and the interior is very elegantly finished; it is seated for about 500. There is also an Episcopal school church near the station, in connection with St. John's, which is used on week days as a school. St. Ninian's Cathedral in Athole street (also Episcopal) was built in 1850. It is in the Scottish middle-pointed style of architecture, and for some years remained in an unfinished condition, but has recently been completed. The Free Church have numerous edifices, as have also the different bodies of Presbyterian dissenters. The Baptists have a commodious chapel in South street, and the Roman Catholics one in Melville street. St. Mary's, Kinnoull hill, is a Roman Catholic establishment, consisting of the church and residence of the Redemptorist Fathers. The house serves also for the accommodation of clergy and laity who come here to spend a short time in spiritual exercises. The building, though simple in its details, forms by its size and proportions a handsome and imposing edifice. It is in the early English style, and is a very perfect specimen of the simple and graceful architecture of the twelfth century. The house and church were built from the designs of Mr. Heiton, city architect.

There are three newspapers published in Perth. The Perthshire Advertiser, published three times a week (Liberal), which has a large and influential circulation in Perthshire and the midland counties, was established in 1829. The Perthshire Constitutional and Journal (Conservative), was established in 1832, and circulates among the nobility, gentry, &c. The Perthshire Courier, established in 1809, is Liberal in politics, and the organ of the Free Church party; it devotes much space to ecclesiastical matters.

The city of Perth contains several charitable and well-supported institutions for the sick and destitute. Among these are the County and City Infirmary (attached to which is a District and Dispensary Department), a Hospital for Incurables, Murray's Royal Institution (an asylum for the insane), King James the Sixth's Hospital, the Destitute Sick Society, &c. The Infirmary is a commanding structure, the first stone of which was laid by the late Lord Kinnaird in 1836. The late Marquis of Breadalbane and Dr. Brown, of Perth, left liberal bequests to this institution. Additional wards for the treatment of infectious diseases were erected in 1865, at a cost of £1,200, defrayed principally by subscription. King James the Sixth's Hospital was founded by King James VI. in 1569, and charters were granted by that monarch in 1569 and 1587, and confirmed by Acts of Parliament in 1587 and 1592, “to provide by all honest ways and means an hospital for the poor, maimed, distressed persons, orphans, and fatherless children within our burgh of Perth,” and for the endowment of which he gave “all the lands, biggins, tenements, kirks, orchards, &c. which pertained to the chaplainries, altars, and prebendaries, founded in whatever kirk, chapel or college within the liberties and privileges of the said burgh of Perth; all the lands, &c., which pertained to the Blackfriars, Greyfriars and Carmelite monks at the Reformation—the profits of the same to be applied, in all time coming, to the hospital and sustenance of the poor.” In 1812 the managers found they were getting into debt, and, instead of keeping inmates in the building, they now give them an equivalent of £6 and £12 a year as outdoor pensioners. At the present time the building is chiefly converted into dwelling houses for the working classes. The Hospital for Incurables is situated on the Dundee road, and usually contains from six to twelve patients. Murray's Royal Institution, erected from a bequest of Mr. James Murray, a native of Perth, was opened in 1827, for the reception of 80 patients. It is situated on an eminence of considerable elevation on the north-west side of the Hill of Kinnoull, and is in the Grecian-Doric style of architecture. The Poorhouse, an extensive pile of buildings, is situated on the Glasgow road, and was erected by the Perth Parochial Board, at a cost of £8,000. The Antiquarian Museum possesses a considerable collection of valuable coins, medals and manuscripts, besides a great variety of natural curiosities, amongst which is a cabinet of minerals, containing upwards of twelve hundred choice specimens. In the centre of Rose terrace was erected in 1805 the Public Seminars, of fine stone, embellished with noble pillars. Since the passing of the Scotch Education Act, 1872, the School Board has remodelled the interior of the buildings and added accessories suitable to modern ideas. It has also instituted a curriculum extending over a period of three years, beginning with the session 1881-2. The schools separated into two divisions—the lower or elementary school, and the higher or secondary school; the latter having for its object what is commonly called middle class education, as given in the best higher public schools. The session commences in September and ends on 30th June. Sharp's Educational Institute is in South Methven street. This large and elegant building, erected by the trustees of the late Mr. John Sharp, baker, Perth, was opened in September, 1860. The institution contains four departments—the industrial, the infants', the junior, and the senior. Special attention is given to the industrial training of girls in sewing, knitting, household economy, &c. The elder boys are taught calisthenics and drill. A handsome and commodious school has been erected in Caledonian road by the School Board, in place of several other smaller ones in different parts of the town which have been closed. A beautiful structure erected, near the bridge, forms a handsome termination to George street. It is dedicated to the memory of the late Thomas Marshall, Esq., of Glenalmond, formerly lord provost. The form of this chapel is circular, ornamented with an elegant Ionic portico; the body of the building is surmounted by a dome, and the whole is imitative of the Pantheon at Rome. In the interior are halls for the public library and the museum of the Literary and Antiquarian Society of Perth. This structure was raised by private subscription. The Freemasons' Hall is a neat building in Parliament close, High street, and contains a spacious room. It was built on the site of the old Parliament House, in 1818, and it the property of the Royal Arch Lodge of Freemasons. A statue of the late Prince Consort was erected in 1864 on the North Inch, and was inaugurated by Her Majesty on the 30th of August of that year. On this occasion the late Sir David Ross, then lord provost, was knighted. The statue is the work of Mr. Brodie, sculptor, Edinburgh, and is much admired. On the fitches many of the citizens ardently engage in athletic sports and exercises, especially cricket, football, and the national game of golf. The Royal Perth Golfing Society includes in its roll of members a great many of the nobility and gentry. The barracks, erected in 1795, at the west end of Athole street, were originally intended to accommodate 200 cavalry, but are now devoted to the use of infantry. The weekly market day is Friday. The fairs, since the year 1822, have been altered by the magistrates and town council, on account of the general inconvenience resulting from the dates formerly appointed falling on the same days, or at the same time, with the fairs of Falkirk and other places; they are now, therefore, held on the first Friday in March, April, July, and September, on the third Friday in October, the second Friday in December, and a sheep and wool fair the first Tuesday after the Verners wool fair, and a horse market takes place on the first Friday in May. There are now two great cattle and sheep markets in Perth, sales taking place on Monday and Friday. The population of Perth in 1881 was 28,948, and in 1891, 30,749.

CRAIGEND is a small hamlet on the Edinburgh road, 2 miles from and in the parish of Perth. There is a United Presbyterian church and a school here.

KINFANNS is a parish 2 miles E. of Perth, and is about five miles long, by a width of two and half. It is situated on the banks of the river Tay, and is a station on the Perth and Dundee line. An Established and a Free church and a Board school are in the parish. Acreage of the parish, 4,291; population in 1881, 588, and in 1891, 566.

GLENCARSE is a small village in the parish of Kinfauns, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles E. by S. from Perth. It is a station on the Perth and Dundee section of the Caledonian railway. The Episcopal church of All Saints is a neat building, in the domestic Gothic style of architecture, erected at a cost of £1,500. It is in the diocese of Brechin.

KINNOULL parishes with its western extremity to the Tay, opposite Perth, extending thence in an irregular manner for nearly four miles, with a general breadth of one mile. The parish consists of several detached portions, including Balbeggie, Murrasshall, Balthayock, and Inchryia. The surface is hilly, but romantic and exceedingly beautiful, being covered to a great extent with fine plantations. From the summit of Kinnoull Hill a beautiful view of the surrounding country may be obtained. Many handsome villas have been erected on the rising grounds to the east of the river, and forming part of the suburb of Perth. The ancient church of the parish was a rectory, in the proprietary of the monastery of Cambuskenneth, and was dedicated to St. Constantine. The modern church is a neat edifice, built on a bank overlooking the Tay. Near this once stood the old castle of Kinnoull. Kinnoull has given the title of earl to a branch of the family of Hay of Erroll, the first of the title being created in 1627, as Lord Hay of Kinfauns, and elevated to the earldom in 1633 as Earl of Kinnoull and Viscount Dupplin. A handsome school has been erected under the combined Boards of Perth and Kinnoull. The parish comprises 3,646 acres, and in 1881 the population numbered 3,461.

PITLOCHRY,

MOULIN, LOGIERAIT, BALLINLUIG, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PITLOCHRY is a thriving village and post town in the parish of Moulin, parliamentary division of West Perthshire, and in the Perth County Court district, and is a station on the Highland railway. It is 13 miles S.W. from Dunkeld, and about 5 N. from Logierait, situated on the banks of the Tummel, and surrounded on all sides by some of the most beautiful and varied scenery found in the Highlands of Perthshire. The trade of the village is mainly confined to that of a domestic and retail character—except that the distillation of whisky is carried on somewhat extensively in the village and neighbourhood. The place, too, is of sufficient importance to encourage the establishment of three banking concerns, branches respectively of the Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and there is, besides, a branch of the Perth Savings Bank. There is a manufactory in the village, carried on by Messrs. Macnaughton, which is noted for the excellence and choice of its Highland tweeds and plaids, &c., and there are several good hotels. The Free church here is a handsome edifice, and for the convenience of the great influx of English visitors there is a small but beautiful church, about half a mile to the east of the village, called Holy Trinity Episcopal church. The Established church, a neat structure in the Gothic style of architecture, was erected in 1884, on an elevated site, at a cost of upwards of £2,000. There are two hydropathic establishments—the Athole and the Pitlochry, the first-named being one of the finest in Scotland, the cost of erection of which was over £100,000. Accommodation is provided for about 250 visitors. The house occupies a commanding position on the sunny side of the Vale of Athole, the public rooms being large and richly furnished. The latter was opened in 1890, and commands an extensive view of the surrounding country. Fairs are held annually on the Saturday before Amulree, in May; on the Friday after Falkirk tryst in August (for lambs), and on the third Wednesday in October (old style). Population in 1881, 777, and in 1891, 1,230.

MOULIN is a large parish in the Highlands, extending towards Athole, bounded on the north-east by the parish of Kirkmichael, on the south-east by Logierait, on the south-west by Dull, and on the west and north-west by Blair-Athole. It is intersected by the Briarachan and the Earn, which unite within the district. The latter runs through Glenfergus, and its junction with the Briarachan forms the Arde. The several lochs are well stocked with trout, particularly Loch Broom. The greater part of the parish is mountainous, but the vales of the streams are exceedingly beautiful. The village, which is very small, is half a mile distant from Pitlochry; near to it stand the ruins of the old castle of Moulin. There is an excellent hotel in the village. The parish church, which was erected in 1832, and the parish school are both situated in this village. In this parish is the pass of KILLIECRANKIE, noted for the battle fought there on the 17th of July, 1699, between King William's army, commanded by General Mackay, and a body of Highlanders under Viscount Dundee, where, after defeating the royal troops, the gallant Claverhouse met with his death. There is a fair held at Moulin annually on the first Tuesday in March. The parish of Moulin has an acreage of 45,900, and in 1891 had a population of 2,066, and in 1891, 2,195.

LOGIERAIT is a parish in the northern part of the county, the village being 8 miles N.W. from Dunkeld, and the like distance N.E. from Aberfeldy. It is noted for the distillation of whisky. The principal part of the parish lies on the point of land formed by the junction of the Tay and the Tummel, extending along the banks of each seven miles. Not far from the church is an eminence, which commands a prospect of the greater part of the parish, and which, including the winding of the rivers, the vales and pastures, with the woodlands in some places extending to the river banks, and the distant mountains, forms one of the richest landscapes that can be imagined. A monument has been erected to the memory of the late Duke of Athole by the gentlemen of the county and his tenants. A Combination Poorhouse was built in 1831 for the accommodation of Logierait and ten adjoining parishes. A handsome iron bridge was erected in 1888 at a cost of £2,800, in place of the chain boat which previously was the only means of communication between the two sides of the river. It was at Logierait that Prince Charles kept his prisoners after the battle of Prestonpans. Ballinluig station is about half a mile distant. Population in 1881, 2,323, and in 1891, 2,220.

BALLINLUIG is a small village in the parish of Logierait, situated about half-way between Dunkeld and Pitlochry. Here is a Baptist chapel, an excellent school, and there is a station on the Highland railway, which is also the junction for Aberfeldy. Population returned with the parish.

SCONE,

BALBEGGIE, CAIRNBEDDIE, COLLACE, GILDTOWN, KINROSSIE, AND ST. MARTINS.

SCONE is a parish lying on the left bank of the Tay, opposite the parishes of Redgorton and Perth. The village, sometimes called New SCONE, is about 2 miles N.E. from Perth, and with the palace occupies a retiring part of the grounds which rise from the Tay, and commands an outlook upon the river and the vale of Perth. This place is worthy of notice principally on account of its ancient palace, for ages the residence of the early Scottish monarchs, the place of their coronation, and the scene of many important and brilliant events. In the vicinage formerly stood an abbey, founded by Alexander I. in the year 1114. Some historians have described SCONE as the ancient capital of the Picts; it certainly was the chief seat of Scottish royalty as far back as the time of Kenneth II. In the church of the abbey was preserved the famous stone (brought from Ireland, according to some writers, by Fergus I.) which was used as the coronation seat, and upon which all the Scottish kings were crowned till the calamitous days of John Balliol, when Edward I. carried it to England, where it continues to form one of the appendages to regality in Westminster Abbey. The last monarch crowned at SCONE was Charles II., January 1st, 1651, when on his expedition in this kingdom. On the site of the ancient palace an elegant new edifice has been raised, as a seat of the Earl of Mansfield, pleasantly situated on an extensive lawn sloping gently to the Tay, and surrounded by large and umbrageous plantations. In this modern mansion much of the antique furniture has, with judicious taste, been preserved; in particular, a bed that belonged to James VI., and another, the hangings of which were wrought by the fair hands of Queen Mary, when a prisoner at Lochleven. The music gallery occupies the same site as the noble hall in which the coronations were performed, and the large gallery for the reception of a collection of valuable paintings is one hundred and eighty feet long. About fifty yards from the house is an aisle of the old abbey of SCONE, containing a magnificent marble monument to a Viscount Stormont, who died upwards of two centuries ago. At a little distance further stands the old market cross of SCONE, surrounded by a wilderness of pleasure grounds, which have usurped the station of the ancient village; it has been aptly observed that "there are many instances of towns losing their market crosses, but this is the only cross which has lost its town." The places of worship are established, Free and United Presbyterian churches. Acreage of the parish, 7,815. Population in 1881, 2,402, and in 1891, 2,003.

BALBEGGIE is a village in the parish of Kinnoull, 3 miles N.E. from SCONE, and 5 N.E. from Perth. It contains a United Presby-terian church.

COLLACE is a parish, 7 miles N.E. from Perth, surrounded by the parishes of Cargill, St. Martins, Kinnaird and Abernethy. The hill of Dunsinane, 1,114 feet above the sea level, is in this parish. Upon this insulated site (rendered famous by Shakspeare), Macbeth, the Thane of Glamis, in 1043, erected a strong and lofty castle, keeping the surrounding country in the most abject subjection. In 1054 an overwhelming force, supported by Edward the Confessor, the reigning King of England, marched upon the stronghold on behalf of Malcolm, son of King Duncan, whom Macbeth had previously murdered. Being observed from the battlements, Macbeth fled northwards, but was pursued and slain, according to tradition, at Lumphannan, in Aberdeenshire. The fortress was razed to the ground. The parish church is a neat Gothic structure, with square tower, erected in 1813. Freestone of good quality abounds in the parish. KINROSSIE is a small village in the parish, the acreage of which is 2,927. Population in 1881, 409, and in 1891, 388.

ST. MARTIN'S is a parish about 5 miles N.E. from Perth, extending along the banks of the Tay, forming an oblong square, averaging nearly two miles in breadth. The soil in general is black, and seems originally to have been taken from moorland. At CAIRN-BEDDIE are the remains of a castle, once occupied by Macbeth, and, as tradition states, this place not being secure, he removed to the celebrated hill of Dunsinane, where he fortified a castle. About a mile from his old residence, at a place called "The Witch Stane"

(where a remarkable stone still stands), is pointed out the spot where he was met by the witches who warned him to beware "till Birnam forest came to Dunsinane," &c. There is a parish church. GULDOWN is a small village in the parish of St. Martin's. Acreage of the parish, 6,565. Population in 1881, 741, and in 1891, 668.

STANLEY,

AUCHTERGAVEN, BANKFOOT, KINCLAVEN, LUNCARTY, REDGORTON, AND MONEYDIE.

STANLEY, a quoad sacra parish, partly in the parish of Auchtergaven and partly in that of Redgorton, is pleasantly situated on the Tay, about 7 miles N. from Perth. It is a station on the North-Eastern section of the Caledonian railway, and is the junction for the Highland railway to Dunkeld, &c. There is a cotton spinning establishment in the village; also a Free church, a church of the Establishment, and a Board school. Population in 1851, 1,276 and in 1891, 1,304.

BANKFOOT is a village in the parish of Auchtergaven, about 9 miles N.W. from Perth, and 6 S.E. from Dunkeld, situated on the road from Perth to the latter place. The district, which is hilly and highly cultivated, lies on the south-west bank of the Tay, and on the south-east side of Birnam Hill. The manor and ancient parish of LOGIEBRIDE is now a component part of this parish. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, and a United Presbyterian church and a Board school are in the village. There are also extensive linen works. Strathard is the nearest railway station $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles distant. The acreage of the parish is 12,941, and the population in 1851 was 2,195 and in 1891, 2,092, of which Bankfoot contained 675.

KINCLAVEN is a parish about 3 miles N.N.E. from Stanley, bounded on the north and east by the river Tay, on the south by Auchtergaven, and on the west by the latter place and Little Dunkeld. The places of worship are the parish church and a United Presbyterian church, and there is a Board school. Acreage 6,136. Population in 1851, 588, and in 1891, 511.

MONEYDIE parish is bounded on the north and north-east by Auchtergaven, and on the south and south-east by Redgorton, and is situated about 5 miles N.W. from Perth. There are a church of the Establishment and a Board school in the parish. Luncarty is the nearest railway station, about 3 miles distant. Acreage, 4,498. Population in 1851, 233, and 1891, 243.

REDGORTON parish is situated on the west bank of the Tay and the north side of the Almond, about 4 miles N.W. from Perth. At LUNCARTY is an extensive bleachfield and a station on the Caledonian railway; and at Redgorton is an Established church and a Board school. Acreage of the parish, 6,007. Population in 1851, 1,452, and in 1891, 995.

THORNHILL,

OR THORNHILL-IN-MENTEITH, is a village in the parish of Kincardine, 45 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, 39 s.w. from Perth, 5 s. from Callander, 4 s.w. from Doune, and 4 s. from Kippen. It consists chiefly of one street, extending nearly half a mile in length. The inhabitants are employed mostly in agriculture. Two churches of the Establishment and a Free church are the places of worship; and there are several schools. The parish lies in the southern quarter of the county, in the strath of Menteith; it is triangular in figure, one side of which is twelve miles in length, another sixteen, and a third about seven. A large portion of the parish was formerly overspread with moss, and at one time entirely covered by an inland sea, but, with the exception of about five hundred acres, it is now free. Adjacent to the Teith, and on the road from Stirling

Doune, is the highly ornamented and improved estate of Blair Drummond, upon which operations of great magnitude have been successfully carried on in reducing the quantity of superincumbent moss, from which the estate is now said to be almost free. Population of the parish in 1891, 1,200, Thornhill containing 474 of that number.

RENFREWSHIRE.

THIS county, of great importance as connected with the manufactures of North Britain, is bounded on the south by Ayrshire, and on the east and north-east by Lanarkshire; the Clyde river and Firth separate it from the county of Dumbarton on the north, and the Firth of Clyde divides it from Argyshire on the west. In figure it is nearly triangular, measuring from north-west to south-east about thirty miles, and varying in breadth from ten to fifteen miles. It embraces an area of 158,785 acres, or 245 square miles, and in size is the twenty-sixth, and in population the third, of the counties of Scotland.

EARLY HISTORY.—At the epoch of the Roman invasion this district was inhabited by the Damii, a British tribe who also occupied the adjacent vale of Strathclyde. The invaders concentrated themselves at a spot near the present site of Paisley, to which they gave the name of Vanduarina. In after times the Romanised inhabitants were subjected to the sway of the Scots, and in 1097 submitted to the silent revolution which took place under Edgar, when the Celtic customs were changed for the municipal laws which the Scotch-Saxon government gradually introduced. In the reign of David I., Walter, the son of Alan, fled from Shropshire during the troublous conflicts of Mand and Stephen, and settled in the district, where David I. made him steward and gave him lands to support the dignity of his office. Besides these possessions, he subsequently acquired the whole district of Strathgryfe and the western half of Kyle, in Ayrshire, which hence was called Kyle Stewart. Such was the manner in which the first of the royal family of Stewart settled in Scotland. At this period the country in this quarter was in a semi-barbarous state, but Walter the Stewart introduced new and civilised usages. He settled many of his military followers on his lands, and by founding the abbey of Paisley, introduced a body of instructed men, who taught the ancient people domestic arts and foreign manners. For several centuries this district formed a portion of Lanarkshire. In 1404 Robert III. created a principality, consisting of the barony of Renfrew and the whole of the Stewart's estates, with the earldom of Carrick and the barony of King's Kyle, all of which he granted, in a free regality, as a provision for his son James; and this principality continued, in after times, the appropriate appanage of the eldest sons of the Scottish monarchs. In consequence of these arrangements, the identity of the barony of Renfrew and the shire of Lanark was dissolved, and the former placed under the jurisdiction of a separate sheriff.

SOIL, PRODUCE, AND MANUFACTURES.—The soil of the county is very much diversified. In those parts of the high grounds which are not covered by heath and moss, a fine light soil on a gravelly substratum is generally found. In the portion formed of detached hills the surface is a thin earth, based on gravel; and in the level districts the plough or spade sinks through a deep, rich brown loam. More than one-half of the shire, comprehending the west and south-east portions, is hilly, and devoted to pasture. The cultivated districts comprise the north, the north-east, and the centre of the county, and consist partly of low elevations, and partly of a level tract of rich loam between Paisley and the river Clyde. The hilly part of the county varies in elevation from 500 to 600 feet; the hill of greatest altitude in the shire is about 1,240 feet high. Owing to the great demand in this county for dairy produce, and that also of the garden and the fold (arising from the vicinity of large and populous towns), nearly two-thirds of the arable land in the shire is kept under grass. Nevertheless the system of agriculture is of the most advanced kind, the crops in general being excellent, and comprising wheat, barley, oats, peas, beans, turnips, and potatoes, of which latter great quantities are grown for Glasgow and the markets of other large towns. The minerals of this shire are of very considerable value, coal, limestone, ironstone, and sandstone abounding in various parts of it; the first-named being wrought principally in the neighbourhoods of Renfrew, Bishopton, Quarrelton, Nitsbill, Neilston, and other places. Underneath the ironstone large quantities of shale are found, from which is extracted a valuable oil, for the manufacture of which large works are established. In point of commercial and manufacturing importance this county is second only to that of Lanark, and with it unites in constituting the great manufacturing districts of Scotland. The goods produced are chiefly of cotton and silk, including, amongst various articles and fabrics, shawls of infinite diversity in texture and price. Whilst Paisley is the head-quarters of the trade in these articles, the business of weaving is pursued, to a greater or less extent, in almost every town, village, and hamlet. Another important branch is the manufacture of sewing cotton, which is carried on very extensively at Paisley. Besides those already mentioned, there are numerous bleachfields, calico and shawl printing works, dyeworks, immense flax-spinning mills, linen thread, sailcloth, paper, starch, and earthenware manufactories, large iron foundries, engineering, ship and boat building works, distilleries, breweries, sugar refineries, and many other branches of commerce of a varied and important character. The free export of manufactured goods is promoted by the different seaports on the Clyde, especially Greenock, by which also foreign produce is imported. The trade is further assisted by the Forth and Clyde Canal, which connects this county with many other shires.

RIVERS, LAKES AND RAILWAYS.—The waters of Renfrewshire are of no great magnitude in themselves, but by the industry and enterprise of the inhabitants of the district they are rendered of material importance to society. The principal streams are the White Cart, the Black Cart, and the Gryffe, all of which ultimately unite and fall into the Clyde below Inchinnan Bridge; that is, about half-way down the river between Glasgow and Port Glasgow. The White Cart (which, by way of distinction, is generally denominated the Cart), has its creative springs at Eaglesham, in this county, and in the high grounds of East Kilbride, in Lanarkshire; and, passing Paisley in its course, joins the Gryffe at the bridge above named. The Black Cart issues from the beautiful loch of Castle Semple, in Lochwinnoch parish, and flowing northward falls in with the Gryffe at Walkinsbaw. The Gryffe rises in the high grounds above Largs, and flows eastward until it meets the Black Cart; the Gryffe bestows the name of Strathgryfe upon the vale through which it flows. The lakes are Castle Semple-Loch, Queenside Loch (in the parish of Lochwinnoch), two lochs in Neilston parish, and several smaller ones. The first-named (Castle Semple) is situate in the southern border of the county; its banks are beautifully wooded in some places, and it contains a small island, on which stand the ruins of a castle. This county greatly benefits by its railway transit, being intersected by the main lines of the Caledonian and the Glasgow and South-Western railways, with their branches.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Renfrewshire comprehends fifteen entire parishes and four parts of parishes. It contains two representative burghs—Port Glasgow and Renfrew—which join with Ratherglen, Dumbarton and Kilmarnock in returning one member to Parliament. Greenock and Paisley each send a representative, and the county having, on the passage of the Re-distribution of Seats Bill, 1885, been separated into the East and West Divisions, now returns two members, instead of one as formerly. The gentlemen now sitting are:—East Division (parliamentary constituency, 9,792), Michael H. Shaw-Stewart, Esq.; West Division (parliamentary constituency, 8,192), Charles B. Renshaw, Esq. The Lord-Lieutenant is Sir M. R. Shaw-Stewart, Bart. According to the census returns for 1881, the county contained a population of 263,874, and by those for 1891, 290,790, showing an increase over the previous return of 27,416. The valuation of the county for 1891-92 (exclusive of railways and public undertakings, £65,642) was £491,680.

BARRHEAD,

HURLET, NEILSTON, NITSHILL, UPLAWMOOR, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BARRHEAD is a thriving village in the parish of Neilston, county of Renfrew, 4 miles S.E. from Paisley, and 7 S.W. from Glasgow. The town or village consists chiefly of one principal street, with several smaller ones diverging from it, and, together with the suburbs of GRAHAMSTON and DUNTERLIE, is the centre of a manufacturing and thickly populated neighbourhood. The trade and manufactures of the district are very considerable, consisting of several large bleach fields, a number of extensive calico printing establishments, mills for cotton spinning and power loom weaving, besides collieries, engineering and ironfoundry works, &c. These altogether give employment to a vast number of both sexes, and contribute materially to the prosperity of the place. In the village are two banking establishments, several respectable shops, and a gas works. The railway station is situated close to the town. The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, an Evangelical Union chapel, a Wesleyan chapel, and one for Roman Catholics. There are three schools built under the Scotch Education Act, each affording accommodation for about 350 children. There is also a Mechanics' Institute, with an extensive library attached. Population of Barrhead in 1881, 7,495.

NEILSTON is a village in the parish of its name, 9 miles S.W. from Glasgow, the like distance N.E. from Stewarton, 5 S. from Paisley and 2 S.W. from Barrhead, eligibly situated on the river Leven, on the road to Irvine, in the midst of a well-cultivated and thriving neighbourhood. In the centre of the village stands the parochial church surmounted by a steeple and clock. The situation of the village is healthy, and it is within ten minutes' walk of the station. In the vicinity are several bleachfields and printworks, and in the village a branch of the Clydesdale Banking Co. Limited. There is a school under the Elementary Education Act, and one for Roman Catholics. The inhabitants also support several institutions and societies of a charitable, friendly, and educational character; there is also an agricultural society. The parish extends 8 miles in length by from 2 to 4 in breadth. From the summit of a ridge of hills, which extends through the entire length of the parish, the prospect is grand and comprehensive, and several plantations add materially to the beauty of the scene. There are two small lakes, called Loch Lebo and Loch Long. From the former issues the Lugton, a tributary stream of the Garnock; and the latter discharges itself into the Leven, which runs north-east to join the Cart. The parish has an area of 12,481 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 11,359, of which 2,311 belonged to the village.

Two miles from Barrhead, on the Glasgow road, are the small villages of HURLET and NITSHILL, where are large chemical works. There is a public school at the former place, and an endowment school at the latter.

UPLAWMOOR is a small village in the parish of Neilston, 5 miles S.W. from Barrhead. There is a church of the Establishment here, and a public school. The station is at Caldwell, close to the village.

It is a pleasant village in the parish of that name, partly in the county of Lanark, but chiefly in that of Renfrew, distant 2 miles s. from Glasgow. Its original designation was Caer-Cart, i.e., the Castle on the river Cart. The parish is of considerable extent, and is almost wholly arable. Here are the engineering works of Messrs. G. & J. Weir. Margarine, paper, pasteboard, souff, and gelatine dry plates for photographic purposes are also manufactured here. The surface of the land is acreably diversified with hills and dales, and presents, in many situations, great picturesque beauty. Agriculture is the occupation of a great proportion of the inhabitants; the very summits of the hills are ploughed and cultivated. The parish church, which is in the Gothic style of architecture, will seat 850 persons, and a Free church has accommodation for 650. There is also a Board School in the parish. The Couper Institute, a handsome stone building erected in 1887, at a cost of about £6,000, was presented to the parish by the late Robert Couper, of Millholm. The field of Langside, in this parish, is remarkable for being the scene of the last fruitless effort of the unfortunate Mary to regain her crown. An eminence is still pointed out where the Queca stood during the engagement. The old castle of Cathcart is a very conspicuous ruin, placed in a commanding situation, with two sides defended by the Cart, to which there is almost perpendicular descent of a tremendous depth. It belonged to the Lords of Cathcart, and has been dismantled over a century. Cathcart parish has an aggregate area of 4,064 acres, and in 1831 contained a population of 12,211, and in 1891, 16,591.

It is a neat modern village, 10 miles s.w. from Glasgow, and 11 s.e. from Paisley, pleasantly situated in the lower part of the parish to which it has given its name, about a mile to the north-west of the old castle of Polnoon; it is composed of two rows of houses, a tributary rivulet to the Cart running through the intermediate space. The old village was demolished in 1769, but was shortly afterwards rebuilt under the direction of a former Earl of Eglinton, who also, in 1790, erected a church, of octagonal form, with an elegant steeple, furnished with a good clock and a fine toned bell; there are likewise places of worship for United Presbyterians and Roman Catholics. The barony of Eaglesham was in the Earl of Eglinton's family from the year 1250, but has passed into that of Allan Gilmour, Esq. J.P. Fairs are held on the third Thursday in May and August (old style). Eaglesham which embraces 15,666 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 1,385, and in 1891, 1,207

GOUROCK.

GOUROCK is an increasing seaport town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Inverkip, 3 miles w. from Greenock, 25 w. from Glasgow, and 69 w. from Edinburgh, beautifully situated on the south side of a fine bay of the river Clyde. The haven is favoured with excellent anchorage ground, and vessels to and from Glasgow, Port Glasgow and Greenock frequently take refuge here in stormy weather; a small but commodious quay was constructed, at the cost of about £5,000, which has nine feet depth at low water—an advantage possessed by no other on the Clyde. The town, which is upwards of a mile in length, has become a fashionable resort in the summer months of families from Glasgow and other places. It is said that this port was the first place in Great Britain where red herrings were prepared. The lands of Gourock were incorporated into a burgh of barony by a charter from William and Mary, dated the 24th of April, 1694, with very extensive powers, and amongst other privileges gives, authority to hold a weekly market and two annual fairs, but the successive proprietors have never yet thought proper to avail themselves of this. A neat chapel was built in the year 1773.
From the increase of the inhabitants and the influx of visitors in the summer, it was too small for their accommodation; to obviate this inconvenience a very commodious place of worship, with a handsome tower and clock, was erected in 1832. A Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and a Scottish Episcopal church are the other places of worship. There are also commodious Board schools. The Gamble Institute, opened in 1876, was built and endowed by Mrs.

Gamble, of Ashburn, at a cost of about £8,000. It contains a public hall, reading room and library, bath rooms, &c. Tramways were laid here from Greenock and opened July, 1873. A railway has been completed connecting this place with Greenock, being a continuation of the Caledonian line from Glasgow to Greenock. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, is established here, and works have been erected for the supply of gas to the town, the population of which in 1881 was 3,336, and in 1891, 5,288.

CONVEYANCE BY WATER.
To GLASGOW, GREENOCK & to the different watering places, Steamers leave the Quay head frequently during the day in summer

GREENOCK,

THE first seaport in Scotland, is 22 miles w. from Glasgow, 15 w. from Paisley, 66 w. from Edinburgh, and 419 from London; situated on the south bank of the river Clyde, and connected with Glasgow by means of the Glasgow and South-Western and the Caledonian railways, and with the coast by the Wemyss Bay railway. The site of the town is unrivalled for the command of grand and picturesque scenery, combining water, wood, and mountain. In the early part of the eighteenth century Greenock was a small village, inhabited chiefly by fishermen, and without quay or harbour; it now, however, possesses several harbours, which have been built at a considerable expense, are most commodious and capacious, and are of sufficient depth to float vessels of great burthen; and in the roads there is good anchorage for ships of the largest class. The quays are spacious, and have well-constructed sheds, supported by iron pillars, for the security of merchandise against the weather; there are also god graving and other docks, capable of receiving vessels of any size. The Mid Harbour, the original harbour of the port, was constructed during the last century, and is about eight acres in extent. The East India Harbour, formed early in this century, is about five acres in extent. The Victoria Harbour, covering over six acres, cost £120,000, and was opened in 1850. The contractors were Messrs. Locke and Brassey. This harbour is one of the finest tidal harbours in the kingdom, and is particularly well suited for vessels of large tonnage. There is a crane capable of lifting eighty tons, so that steamers of the largest class may have their engines fitted without touching the ground. The Albert Harbour, built while James J. Greive, Esq. M.P. was provost, is about eleven acres in extent, and cost, including quays, £200,000. This harbour was opened in 1860, the contractors being Messrs. York, of Glasgow. The Princess pier, which extends along the Clyde westward from the harbour about 1,600 feet, was erected at a cost of £70,000 by the same contractors. With this pier the Glasgow & South-Western railway has direct communication, thus affording great facilities of conveyance for passengers and their luggage between the steamboats and the trains. The pier was opened in 1870. The James Watt wet dock, which is so named in honour of the famous engineer who was a native of this town, is one of the finest wet docks in the kingdom, and was constructed while Dugald Campbell, Esq. was provost. It was designed by Mr. Walter R. Kinnipple, C.E., of Greenock and Westminster, is upwards of 2,000 feet in length, 32 feet in depth, and 400 feet in width, and is capable of accommodating the largest vessels afloat. The contractor was Mr. John Waddell, of Edinburgh. There are large warehouses on the margin of the quays for grain and other merchandise, with elevators and hoists of the most improved description worked by hydraulic power. This dock was opened for traffic in 1886. As the Caledonian and Glasgow and South Western railways have a connection with the docks and warehouses, the means of receiving and distributing goods to all parts of the country is of the most complete character. There is also a large tidal harbour outside the wet dock, where timber vessels can be discharged, and at which coal and pig iron can be shipped. This harbour is 50 acres in extent. These works cost in all about half a million sterling. There are three public graving docks connected with the harbour, and two private ones in the hands of Messrs. Caird & Co. Limited, and Scott & Co. shipbuilders. The oldest of the public graving docks, which is situated at the Mid Harbour, was built in 1780, and is fitted for vessels of 150 feet in length, and drawing 10 feet. Another, at the East India Harbour, is 300 feet in length, 16 feet in depth and 40 feet wide on the sill. The third, which is of recent construction, is large, commodious and useful, and is 600 feet in length, 20 feet in depth, and 60 feet in width on the sill. It is named the Garvel Dock, and was constructed while James Morton, Esq. was provost; it cost £120,000, and the contractors were Messrs. Kirk, of London.

Spacious municipal buildings have been erected in the centre of the town for the accommodation of the various departments connected with the Corporation and Harbour Trust, the architects being Messrs. Barclay, of Glasgow. These buildings, erected while Provost Campbell was in office, cost, including the ground, about £120,000, and are arranged so as to form part of the Town Hall, which is a very commodious structure, and is seated for about 2,000. The contractors were, for the stonework, Mr. Maxwell, Glasgow, and for the timber work, Messrs. Miller & Brown, Greenock. The old town offices, which were taken down to make way for the new buildings, were designed in 1760 by the father of James Watt, who was at that time one of the bailies of the town: The Esplanade was formed at a cost of about £20,000. It extends from the foot of Campbell street, in a noble sweep, of about a mile and a quarter, along the shore of the Firth. It is protected by a substantial sea wall, with palisades, and it is provided with numerous landing places; it is also well lighted with gas, and seats are disposed at convenient distances for the accommodation of pedestrians. A fountain has been erected on the Esplanade by a number of the admirers of John Galt, the novelist, who lived for several years in Greenock, and is buried here. Gas works on an extensive scale have been erected on Inch Green Island at the east end of the burgh. Among the public edifices of this town, the Custom House decidedly ranks first, and is truly a grand national structure. The selection of its situation is most appropriate; the grand front faces the water, having a fine open space from the edge of the quay. The building is of Grecian architecture, and in it the business of the customs, and inland revenue is transacted. The entrance to the Custom House is at the north front, facing the river, and that of the inland revenue at the east front. This fine edifice was erected under the direction of Mr. Burn, of Edinburgh. The Post Office is situated in Wallace square. The building was erected by the Corporation, and leased by the Post Office authorities; but as the accommodation is inadequate, it is proposed to erect a new post office in Cathcart street, the Tontine Hotel and other buildings having been purchased for the purpose. Under the Improvement Act considerable parts of the older districts of the town have been cleared and rebuilt at a cost of £150,000. This has brought about a large reduction in the death rate, and the town is now one of the healthiest in the country. The newsroom, in Cross Shore street, is well supplied with papers and magazines; this room is also used as the Greenock Chamber of Commerce. There is a club-house in Ardgowan square, which is handsome and commodious. A wide roadway, leading up to the "Benias," a hill at the west end of the town, overlooking the river, was formed during the depression of trade in 1878, by unemployed workmen, who received an allowance from the Corporation for their labour. It was made while Abram Lyle, Esq., was provost, and it is called after him, the "Lyle Road," its cost being about £17,000. From the top of this road there is a most extensive view of the Clyde from Bowling to Dunoon, and it has become a great resort for artists desirous of painting views on the Clyde. Greenock is the birthplace of the illustrious Watt, the perfecter of the steam engine, who was born in 1736. In commemoration of this circumstance a handsome building has been erected in Union street, called the Watt Monument and Institution, for the purpose of library, art gallery, &c., upon ground given by the late Sir Michael Shaw-Stewart, Bart. The building is from a design by Mr. Blore, architect, of London, and cost upwards of £7,000. A statue of the deceased engineer, from the chisel of Chantrey, put up at a cost of £2,000, is placed within the entrance of the edifice. The Mechanics' Institute, in Sir Michael street, has also a good library and newsroom. The public baths are in the same building, the entrance being in Tobago street.

Among the most important branches under the head of, or connected with, manufactures are three shipbuilding establishments, the yards being so complete as to rank second only to those belonging to the Crown. There are several extensive engine works, marine and otherwise, and iron foundries, ropewalks, tanyards, and extensive sugar and glucose refineries, a brewery, manufactories for woollen and sail cloth; a distillery and large mills for spinning wool and flax and for making paper. But in nothing is Greenock more celebrated than in the building and fitting up of steam vessels, furnishing them for all parts of the world. Most of the fine steamers belonging to the Peninsular and Oriental Steamship Company have been built here. Since the opening of commercial intercourse with India and China, the merchants of this place have prosecuted the trade to those countries with great spirit and commensurate success, the Clyde steamers, from the superiority of their construction, never failing to secure a preference of engagements. Greenock derives vast advantages from the application of steam to navigation, there being a great number of vessels propelled by this powerful auxiliary constantly traversing the Clyde to and from Glasgow and the intermediate places on the banks of the river, where they make stoppages for the convenience of passengers. Large and elegant steamboats leave this port for London, Liverpool, Dublin, Belfast, Londonderry, the Isle of Man, Campbelltown, Ayr, Inverness and other places in the Highlands, at stated periods. Indeed, no town in the kingdom affords greater facility to travellers by this mode of conveyance than Greenock. The steamers carrying the Irish mails are despatched from this port.

There is in the neighbourhood of the town the greatest amount of water power to be found in the kingdom; this is derived from an extensive breakwater having been thrown across a valley, in the bottom of which a stream of water flowed, now forming a condensed body of that element, two miles long and half a mile wide. Having a depth of sixty feet, and an elevation of five hundred feet above the level of the sea, it furnishes sites for a large number of mills, with power to any extent that may be required. The Clyde Sugar Refinery, one of the works on the line of falls, has a large water wheel 70 feet in diameter, with buckets 12 feet in breadth, and a power equal to 240 horses for driving the machinery. This artificial loch is also rendered subservient to the supply of the town with water for domestic purposes. The undertaking was completed in 1827 by a company, under the title of the the Shaws Water Company. There are in the town branch establishments of the following banks, viz., the Bank of Scotland, the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Clydesdale Banking Co., Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the British Linen Company Bank, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Provident Savings Bank. The municipal government of Greenock is vested in a provost, six bailies, a town treasurer, a dean of guild, and sixteen councillors, who have power of making laws for the burgh, and of maintaining peace and order within its limits. The present provost is Walter W. B. Rodger, Esq. The police are under the most efficient regulation, both those of the town and those of the harbour; the management of the latter is confided to its commissioners along with the town council. The town has a gaol, which is included in the County Buildings, situate in Nelson street; here also are held the sheriff and other courts, and apartments are provided for the necessary officers connected therewith. The burgh sends one member to Parliament: the present (1892) representative is Sir Thomas Sutherland, Esq., of Aberdeen and London, chairman of the Peninsular and Oriental Steamship Co.

The Theatre Royal in West Blackhall street, a comfortable and well-appointed place of amusement, was opened in 1858. Considerable facilities are afforded for healthful recreation by the establishment of rowing, cricket, and bowling clubs; these are all well supported, and the grounds and bowling greens are kept in excellent order. The Well Park, in Regent street, is small, but well laid out; it overlooks the town, and is approached from Cathcart street by a series of terraces. From it on a clear day fine views of the Clyde and the Argyshire hills are obtained. The Wellington Park, situated near Drummochroar road, was formally opened and devoted to the public on the first of June, 1872. It is laid out upon ground presented to the town by Sir Michael R. Shaw-Stewart, Bart., and is of considerable extent; the lower and more level portion contains bowling, cricket, and playing grounds, while the more elevated parts, though not susceptible of improvement by cultivation, yet afford space for pleasant rambles, and very fine views are also here presented of the town, the Firth, and surrounding scenery. The cemetery, which is one of the finest in the kingdom, and belongs to the Corporation, is about ninety acres in extent, and is beautifully laid out. Two newspapers are published here, the Greenock Herald and the Greenock Telegraph and Clyde Shipping Gazette. There are several charitable institutions, the finest amongst which, as a building, is Sir Gabriel Wood's Mariners' Asylum, an institution founded by the late Sir Gabriel Wood, for the relief and comfort of aged and decayed master mariners and merchant seamen. The Infirmary, erected in 1809, has been considerably enlarged; it is ornamental as a public edifice, and its utility is universally acknowledged. The Buchanan Night Asylum affords food and shelter to such poor persons as may be without a home. A Sailors' Home, on the same principle as those of Liverpool and Dublin, is established. A museum has been presented to the town by the late Mr. James McLean, of West Bank. It is situated in Kelly street, close to the Monument, and cost about £7,000; it is also endowed. A commodious Poor House and Lunatic Asylum has been erected by the parochial board of Greenock, at Smithston, about a mile out of the town; the cost was over £80,000. The old Meat Market and Slaughter House has been taken down by the Corporation authorities, and new buildings giving better accommodation have been erected. The new railway connecting Greenock and Gourock on the Caledonian line from Glasgow affords great convenience to the inhabitants, as it provides two additional stations.

About a mile west from Greenock, close to the bank of the Clyde, there has been erected a pier and torpedo battery for protecting the river. There are several very agreeable bathing villages in the vicinity. One of these forms a pleasing and picturesque object from the quays, being seated under the mountains on the opposite side of the Firth, which is several miles across. Steamboats go to and from the different villages during the bathing season.

Greenock comprehends three parishes, respectively called the West parish, the Mid parish, and the East parish—all being erected out of, and separated from, the original parish of Inverkip. The first, which may be styled the mother parish of the three, includes the western part of the town and the greater proportion of the country district.

The West parish church is a modern and elegant structure situated in Nelson street; the original church, which was for some time in ruins, has been repaired, and stands near the shore, surrounded by an old burial ground, which is interesting from being the resting place of Burns' "Highland Mary," and to mark which some years since a monument was erected. The Mid parish comprehends the central part of the town; the church is situated in Cathcart square, and is an elegant structure, with a lofty steeple. The site is extremely well selected to render it an ornament to the town, and it forms a highly interesting object in the prospect from the river. The East parish possesses places of worship in Regent street, Cartburn street, and Ladyburn. There is an Episcopal (English) church in Union street. The Free Church of Scotland has twelve places of worship, the United Presbyterian seven, and there are buildings connected with the various other denominations, a list of which will be found in the Directory of the town. Greenock Academy is a large establishment for the education of both sexes. It is under the supervision of a rector, and is, along with eleven public schools, under the School Board. Several schools of a very commodious description have been erected by the School Board at a cost of £70,000. The weekly market is held on Friday, and there are two annual fairs, one taking place on the first Thursday in July, the other on the fourth Tuesday of November, and horse and cattle markets twice a year—on the Friday before Glasgow Whit-Monday fair, and on the Friday immediately preceding Kilmarchan fair. The population of the town in 1881 was 69,329, and in 1891, 69,423.

HOUSTON,

BRIDGE OF WEIR, CROSSLEE, ERSKINE, AND BISHOPTON.

HOUSTON (or Houstoun) is a village or small town in the united parish of Houston and Killehan, 14 miles w. from Glasgow, 7 n.w. from Paisley, and the like distance s.e. from Port Glasgow, pleasantly situated on both sides of the Houston burn. It consists of two long streets, one on each side of the rivulet. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in weaving and embroidering. At the east end of the town is a small parish church; there are also a Free church and a Roman Catholic chapel and school, also Board schools. It is said that the town is partly built of the stones that once composed the castle of Houston, an ancient mansion, which formerly stood in this neighbourhood. To the east, the residence of the knights of Houston, and demolished in 1780, by a proprietor of the estate. Population of the village in 1881, 553.

About one mile from Houston and three from Johnstone (a station on the Glasgow and South-Western Railway) most delightfully and romantically situated in a valley, is WEIR BRIDGE, more familiarly known by the name of "Bridge of Weir." It is the boundary of the parish in this quarter, being divided from the parish of Kilbarcan by the river Clyde. It is rapidly growing into favour as a country residence for Glasgow merchants, a large number of villas having been built. About a mile and a half from the village are the New Orphan Homes of Scotland, which have been erected under the superintendence of William Quarrier, Esq., at a cost of about £90,000. In the village are a church of the Establishment, erected at a cost of £3,000, with seating accommodation for 500 persons, a Free church, one for the United Presbyterians, and a Board school. Population in 1881, 1,267.

About a mile hence is CROSSLEE, once participating in the prosperity enjoyed by different places in the parish as the seat of manufactures, but latterly almost deserted, owing to the destruction by fire of a large cotton mill, in which many hands were employed. The united parish is about six miles in length, by three in breadth.

The low grounds are in general fertile and beautified by some fine natural tracts of wood. Acreage of the parish of Houston and Killehan, 7,585; population of Crosslee in 1881, 406.

The parish of ERSKINE is six miles in length and from three to four in breadth, situate on the Clyde, opposite to Kilpatrick, and about 6 miles n.w. from Paisley. The ground rises gently from the river, and is laid out in rich plantations, orchards and corn fields. Erskine House, the seat of Lord Blantyre, is a beautiful mansion, seated amidst tasteful pleasure grounds facing the Clyde. The Glasgow and Greenock section of the Caledonian railway passes through the parish. Erskine, it is said, is the oldest ferry on the Clyde. Acreage, 7,535; population in 1881, 1,658, and in 1891, 1,691.

BISHOPTON is a small village in Erskine parish, on the Glasgow and Greenock road, 13 miles w.s.w. from the former place, and 10½ e.s.e. from the latter. There is a place of worship belonging to the Free church, and a Board school. Brick making is carried on to some extent, and may be said to constitute the only approach to manufacturing in the village. The Greenock section of the Caledonian line passes near to the village, for which it has a station.

JOHNSTONE,

ELDERSLIE, KILBARCHAN, MILLIKEN PARK, AND CARTSIDE.

JOHNSTONE is a very considerable manufacturing town, within the landward part of the abbey parish of Paisley, 3½ miles w. from that town, 10 w.s.w. from Glasgow, 8 n.n.e. from Beith, and 14 s.e. from Greenock, most agreeably situated, contiguous to the Black Cart river. The increase of population in this locality has been very remarkable. In 1782 it contained but ten persons. The system of feuing was then commenced here, and since that period it has been progressively increasing up to the present time. Trade and commerce have likewise kept pace with the augmentation of its population, there being now in the neighbourhood two large cotton mills, a large paper mill, iron foundries, an engine, machine and tool manufactories, &c. The extensive linen thread mills of Messrs Finklyson, Bousfield & Co., which give employment to over 2,000 hands, are situated here, as are also three branch banking establishments, exclusive of one for savings. There were at one time upwards of 300 hand-loom weavers here, but this trade is now entirely extinct. Contiguous to the town are several valuable iron, coal and shale mines. The town which is lighted with gas and well supplied with water, is very regularly laid out, having good streets, with two spacious squares, one of which forms a market place; the houses are for the most part substantially constructed, and the shops are numerous and well stocked. The new burgh buildings, a fine stone structure situated in Collier street, and erected at a cost of £2,000 was opened on the 28th September, 1883. The court room is a spacious and well fitted-up apartment, ornamented with the coat of arms of the burgh in relief. In the Commissioners' room is a full-length portrait of the late Sir William M. Napier, Bart., presented to him by his tenants, and handed over to the burgh by Sir Archibald Lennox M. Napier Bart., in November, 1887. The Glasgow and South-Western railway passes the town, and affords direct communication with all parts of the country. The Glasgow, Paisley and Johnstone Canal, eleven miles in length, was projected with the intention of running through the valley of the Black Cart to Ardrossan. It reached Johnstone, and was opened in 1810; but the Glasgow and South-Western Railway Company, afterwards forming their line along the projected course, there was no necessity for continuing the canal further. The railway company subsequently acquired possession of and used it for goods traffic only; but an act of Parliament having been obtained to close it, a railway has now been made along its site. From an eminence on the Paisley road Johnstone has a pleasing appearance; to the left, at a short distance, stands Johnstone Castle, surrounded by thriving plantations, commanding a fine view for many miles round. To the west, immediately beyond the river Cart, is a delightful residence, formerly the seat of Sir Robert Napier. The places of worship are two churches of the Establishment, a Scottish Episcopal church, a Free church, two United Presbyterian churches, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The public institutions are the Johnstone Working Men's Institute, containing a news room, a public hall, capable of holding 1,000 people, and which contains a very fine organ, the gift of Mr. Bousfield, late of the firm of Finlayson, Bousfield & Co., of this place, with Mechanics' Institute, and bible, missionary, and friendly societies. Two schools have been erected under the Scottish Education Act, capable of affording accommodation for upwards of 1,000 children; besides these, there are also a Roman Catholic school and a school for factory children. Horse fairs are held on the Thursday after the second Monday of July and first Friday in January, and a cattle and pleasure fair in the middle of July, which lasts for three days. Population in 1831, 9,267, and in 1891, 9,668.

KILBARCHAN is a manufacturing town, in the parish of its name, one mile and a half w. from Johnstone, and about 5 miles w. from Paisley, situate on the southern declivity of a hill, and pretty regularly built. Upwards of 1,000 looms are employed in this place and its immediate vicinity in the manufacture of silk, cotton, shawls, robes, &c. In the centre of the town is a school-house, with a tower, on which is statue of Habbie Simpson, the well-known Scotch piper, born in this parish. It was executed by Archibald Robertson, a young sculptor from Greenock. The places of worship are the parish church, a United Presbyterian and a Unitarian church. Gas was introduced by a company in 1846, and the town is now well lighted. There are two public libraries containing several thousand volumes, and a branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited. A horse fair is held annually on the first Tuesday in December (old style). Acreage of the parish, 9,006; population in 1831, 6,868, and in 1891, 7,112.

ELDERSLIE is a village within the landward part of the abbey parish of Paisley, and has a station on the Glasgow and South-Western line about half a mile distant from Johnstone, and 2½ miles from Paisley. Cotton spinning and the manufacturing of carpets is carried on here and at GLENPATRICK, a short distance away, is a distillery. There is an Established church and a public school in the village, to which is attached considerable interest, from the fact of its having at one time been the residence of the renowned Wallace. Population in 1891, 1,468.

LOCHWINNOCH,

NEW TOWN OF BELTREES AND HOW-WOOD.

LOCHWINNOCH is a large village in the parish of its name, 15½ miles s.w. from Glasgow, 8½ s.s.w. from Paisley, 6½ s.s.w. from Johnstone, and 3½ n. from Beith. The Glasgow and South-Western railway has a station about one mile from the town. The village is situated on the north-west bank of the beautiful lake from which it derives its appellation, and surrounded by scenery of a most interesting and romantic character, highly attractive to the tourist; among which the lovely loch, the banks of the Calder, the sublime cataract of Reekan Linn, the bottomless Gurratt's Linn, the Calder Glen, and the remains of several old castles, are all eminently worthy of a visit from the stranger to these parts. The lake, which stretches in a northerly and southerly direction, lies in the eastern part of the parish; it receives the Calder water on its west side, and its issue forms the Black Cart river; it is about two miles in length by one in breadth, but was formerly much more extensive, having been contracted by an embankment, whereby several hundred acres of land have been reclaimed and brought into cultivation. On the north-west side of the loch stands Castle Semple House, the seat of James Widdrington Shand-Harvey, Esq., the situation of which is in the highest degree picturesque; it occupies the site of the ancient castle of Semple, founded by Lord John Semple about the year 1500; it was demolished in 1735. On a small island in the lake is the "Peel," the remains of some forgotten stronghold of which nothing but a vault now exists. Lochwinnoch possesses some claims to notice as a place of manufactures, and contains three extensive cabinet and chair manufactories, which together give employment to a large number of hands, a bleach-field, &c. There is also established here a branch of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited. The village is ornamented by a parochial church having a handsome steeple; also a Free church and a United Presbyterian church. Justice of peace courts are held here on the first Tuesday of each month. There is an annual fair, called the "Fair of Hill," which is held on the first Tuesday in November (old style). The parish of Lochwinnoch, which embraces 19,507 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 3,869, and in 1891, 3,477; of this number 1,413 belonged to the village.

How-wood is a small village in the parish of Lochwinnoch, 3½ miles N.E. from that town, situate on the high road between Beith and Glasgow. The Glasgow and South-Western railway has a station in the village. In the neighbourhood are two bleach works. About a mile and a half nearer to Lochwinnoch, in that parish, is a place called New Town of Belbrees, another small village, neither of which contains any object worthy of particular description. In 1881 How-wood had a population of 333, and in 1891, 420.

MEARNS,

WITH BUSBY, GIFFNOCK, CLARKSTON, AND NEWTON MEARNS.

MEARNS is a village in the parish of its name, 7 miles s. from Glasgow, and s.e. from Paisley, and about 3½ s.w. from Clarkston station on the Glasgow and Kilbride line. The parish lies in the south-eastern part of the county, and extends seven miles in length by about three in breadth. The surface of the land is finely diversified by pleasing undulations, rising gradually from east to west; it is generally fertile, and adapted to the purposes of the dairy, whilst other portions of the district afford excellent pasturage. The great road from Glasgow to Ayr and Kilmarnock runs through the whole length of the parish; and a road has been opened from Glasgow, which, passing Newton Mearns, joins the former one a little beyond the King's Well Inn.

In the parish are several bleachfields and a calico printing works. The village of Mearns is well built and of pleasing appearance; it possesses a superior inn, and a branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited. The only object of antiquity in the parish is the castle of Mearns, near the village. It is a large square tower, seated on a rocky eminence, commanding an extensive and beautiful prospect; it is encompassed by a strong wall, and the entrance appears to have been secured by a drawbridge. This interesting relic of former times is now out of repair and dismantled; it belongs to Sir R. M. Shaw-Stewart, Bart., of Ardgowan; but its origin is lost in obscurity. The parish is adorned by several elegant modern seats and mansions; and the lands are irrigated and refreshed by the waters of three lakes, one of which, named Black Loch, is nearly two miles and a half in circumference. The parish, which embraces 10,281 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 8,965, and in 1891, 8,428.

CLARKSTON is a village in Cathcart parish, 2 miles s. from Glasgow, and is a station on the Glasgow and Kilbride line of the Caledonian railway. Numerous villas have of late years been erected here by Glasgow merchants for suburban residences.

GIFFNOCK is also a station on the Glasgow and Kilbride line, and is rapidly growing into favour as a country residence for Glasgow merchants.

NEWTON MEARNS (or Newton) is a village in Mearns parish, 3 miles s.w. from Giffnock. Here is situated the parish church, a neat stone edifice, containing 700 sittings, with a handsome spire, in which is an excellent clock. There is also a place of worship for the United Presbyterians, and a Board school.

BUSBY is a small romantic village in the parish of Mearns, and is a station on the Glasgow and Kilbride line, distant 6 miles s. from Glasgow. Calico printing and bleaching are carried on here, and there is a chemical manufactory.

PAISLEY,

WITH BALACLAVA, CLIPPENS, INKERMANS, LINWOOD, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PAISLEY is a parliamentary burgh, and the seat of a presbytery in the parish of the abbey of Paisley, 63 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, about seven s. by w. from Glasgow, and 17 s.e. from Greenock. This active manufacturing town, so distinguished by the beauty of its shawls and muslins, and its extensive fabrication of thread, stands in a healthy and picturesque situation on the banks of the White Cart, about three miles above the confluence of that river with the Clyde, and enjoys the advantages of railway communication, being thus connected with Glasgow, Greenock, Kilmarnock, Ayr, &c. The burgh, or Old Town of Paisley, is on the western side of the river; the New Town on the eastern side. The High Church, with its lofty spire, rises from a fine eminence, the south side of which, and its summit, are covered with buildings and its northern slope is laid out in gardens. This central ridge forms a natural terrace, which runs westward from the river nearly half a mile, terminating abruptly at a point where the Romans had a fort and fortified camp, whence is a prospect extensive and beautiful. With this camp several minor stations are believed to have had communication, each placed on the summit of a neighbouring eminence, such as Woodside, the Knock and Castlehead; while the name of "Caneside," still retained by one of the streets of the burgh, is thought to indicate the former existence of a Roman road, leading to or by the principal station.

Paisley is generally supposed to have been the Vandua of Ptolemy, a notion supported by the etymology of the name of Vandua—the British words wen dir signifying the "white water," and thus expressing the present distinctive appellation of the river on the banks of which the town is built. In ancient days Paisley was distinguished only for its abbey, and the shrine of Saint Mirin, which it enclosed, was resorted to by multitudes of pilgrims from all parts of Scotland; Saints James, Mirin, and Milbruge divided the tutelary honours. This great and opulent monastic establishment was founded in the year 1164, by Walter, great steward of Scotland, and son of Allan, the first of the Stewarts, who, for a long period, made this abbey their family manseum. The religious order of the Cisterciens were the first occupants. It was originally a priory, but was afterwards elevated to the rank of an abbey, its lands being by James II. erected into a regality, of which the abbot was lord. By Abbot George Schaw, in 1484, the abbey precincts were surrounded by a lofty wall of hewn stone, a mile in circumference, the greater part of which has been demolished; still a portion of it remains, as does an inscription setting forth, in quaint rhyme, Abbot Schaw as its builder. This inscription was on a tablet in the wall, and is now inserted in a house in Lawn street. In 1560, the Reformation having taken place, the abbey and lands were made a temporal barony in favour of Lord Claud Hamilton, third son of the Duke of Chateaufort, and on whom was conferred the title of Lord Paisley. The abbey lands having been transferred in 1652 from the Earl of Abercorn to the Earl of Angus, and from him in 1658 to Lord Dundonald, the greater portion became the property, by purchase, of the Marquis of Abercorn in 1764, who intended to have kept it entire as a residence; but finding it had become much dilapidated, he let it on building leases; so that the park, orchard, and gardens of the abbey subsequently became the site of the new town of Paisley, and the stones from the walls form a portion of the materials of which the houses were built.

The abbey church, mutilated as it now is, constitutes the most interesting public structure of which Paisley can boast. The nave, which in the interior exhibits three tiers of arches, is neatly fitted up, and contains some curious monuments and sepulchral inscriptions. It is the parochial church of an extensive rural district lying around the town, and called the "parish of the abbey of Paisley." The choir is levelled down to within a few feet of the ground, the north transept is more entire, and displays in its large, well-proportioned northern window a striking relic of ancient ecclesiastical magnificence. Three windows of good size and elegant design, with a recessed doorway, form the principal ornament of the western front, and during the past few years a number of ornamental stained windows have been added in memory of some of the best families in the town and district. Within the above-mentioned choir lie the remains of King Robert III. and Marjory, his daughter, over which has recently been placed a Silesian marble slab presented by Her Majesty Queen Victoria in commemoration of her visit to Paisley in 1888. Near the abbey is a Gothic chapel built in 1499, and dedicated to Saints Columba and Mirin, and now used as a place of sepulture for the Abercorn family. The remarkable degree of resonance possessed by this little building (which is still, from the circumstance, called the sounding aisle) has been magnified by most writers. Much of the effect which it formerly produced is now, however, lost, from the re-construction within the chapel of a large altar tomb, consecrated to the memory of Marjory Bruce, wife of the great steward Walter, and mother of Robert II. The aperture in the brickwork formed to close up the interstices of a once beautiful eastern window likewise contributed to weaken the echo. It is not improbable that, for some time after the suppression of its abbey, Paisley languished, and when Crawford—the first regular historian of Renfrewshire—produced his learned and useful work the town consisted of no more than one principal street and a few narrow lanes or wynds branching from it. Its population did not at that time exceed 8,000—many, some assert that its inhabitants were then only about 1,500 in number.

The portion called the Old Town is considerably more extensive than the new, and contains all the chief warehouses of the manufacturers. Many of its streets are well built, and there are three parallel lines running from east to west of very great length. The New Town, comprising many streets, occupies a level surface on the eastern side of the Cart. Of both portions of the town, the entire length can scarcely be less than two miles; while the extreme breadth of Paisley, from north to south, must reach at least a mile and a half. East, north, and west of it are suburbs with distinct names, such as Williamsburgh, Dovesland, Lylesland, Carriage Hill, Charleston, Maxwellton, Ferguile, Castlehead, Meikleriggs, Moss Vale and Millarston. The eastern and western parts of the town are connected by three bridges, two of which are of recent construction; one of them has had its name changed from Sueddon bridge to that of Abercorn bridge. The old stone bridge at the foot of High street has been widened and made to harmonise with its new neighbour. The large arch carrying the railway across the river is close to the new Abercorn bridge. Great alterations are being effected in every quarter of the town, old houses are being removed to make room for handsome public buildings and modern dwellings, the narrow streets widened, and the outskirts of the town extended by the erection of terraces and cottages. During the past few years great improvements have been made in Paisley, amongst the principal being the construction of a new railway station at a cost of £150,000, and the deepening of the White Cart, for which borrowing powers for £100,000 were obtained from Parliament in 1885. Commodious quays have been erected and the river made navigable for vessels drawing 15 feet of water; but, owing to financial difficulties and disputes between the contractors and the Cart Navigation Trustees operations are now (1892) at a standstill. Between 1786 and 1791 the above river was, at an expense of £4,000, made navigable to the town for sloops of 40 to 50 tons burthen, and in 1842 attempts were made with dredging machines to deepen it, so as to admit of vessels of greater burthen, but it was then found impracticable. The Glasgow and Johnstone canal, which at one time had a flourishing trade, has been acquired by the Glasgow and South-Western Railway Co. and is now closed, a line of railway having been laid along its course. The George A. Clark Town Hall is regarded as one of the most magnificent halls in Scotland, the cost of its erection being no less than £100,000. It is called after one of the Brothers Clark, who some years ago bequeathed £20,000 for its erection, the deficiency between this sum and its cost having, in a princely manner, been subscribed by the three surviving brothers of the Clark family, whose names deserve lasting remembrance by a grateful community. These are James, William John, and Stewart. The elder brother, James, died a few months before the hall was opened. The venerable mother of the family bequeathed some four or five thousand pounds to furnish an organ for the hall, which was erected by an eminent London firm, Messrs. Bryceson, Prothers and Ellis; it is a four manual instrument, and is the finest organ in Scotland, except that in the college of Edinburgh. The hall was formally opened on the 30th of January, 1882, on which occasion the Messrs. Clark invited to a conversation 1,200 of the elite of Paisley, and of many other towns in Scotland. A procession of all the trades took place during the day, and surpassed in magnificence any procession ever known in the district. It was a condition of Mr. Clark that the hall should be erected in the New Town, that being the district in which he was born, in 1823. The erection stands on the margin of the river Cart, and contains a chime of bells in the tower, which, by ingenious mechanism, play 35 tunes, varied each day of the month. Another magnificent edifice which now forms a valuable addition to Paisley's many fine specimens of architecture is the new Sheriff Court House, in St. James street, built in the Italian style, at a cost to the county of about £15,000. The court hall in the rear has accommodation for about 300 persons, exclusive of that for magistrates, jurors, reporters, &c. There is also special accommodation for male and female witnesses, and judge and jury retiring rooms. The building also contains offices, &c., for the sheriff clerk and procurator fiscal. It was formally opened on June 30th, 1887. The new County Buildings, another striking architectural feature of the town, were opened in the autumn of 1890, and are situated in St. James street, contiguous to the Sheriff Court House. The architects, Messrs. Clark & Bell, of Glasgow, have adopted a classical style, similar to that of the Court buildings, and so maintaining a uniformity of frontage. The edifice is two storeys in height, and is set off in the centre with a colonnade of Ionic pillars with pediment on top. These columns rest on the first storey and form a portico which is lighted with three large windows. Between the cornice and ceiling of this portico is a frieze executed by F. W. Pomeroy, Esq., London. The building contains the county hall, with committee rooms, offices for the county clerk, county road clerk, medical officer for the county, sanitary inspector, county assessor, chief constable, head-quarters of the county police, with police cells, justice of peace clerk, and justice of peace court hall. The cost is estimated to be about £25,000. A most conspicuous public edifice is the old County Buildings, now the Municipal Buildings, a large towered, turreted, and embattled fabric, comprehending a variety of rooms and offices for the municipal authorities, and a prison chapel, erected in 1820. The county gaol until recently formed part of this building; but, the prisoners having been transferred to Glasgow, the gaol is now used as a bridewell. Between the noble pile which forms the front edifice and the prison in its rear are two courts for exercise and air. By a charter granted by James IV. in 1488, in favour of Abbot George Schaw, Paisley was created a burgh of barony. The fourth centenary of Paisley as a burgh was celebrated in August, 1888. Her Majesty the Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and Prince Henry of Battenberg, graced the ceremony by her presence, and received a most loyal reception. This was the first visit of royalty to the town during the long period of 271 years. The present municipal body consists of a provost, four bailies, a treasurer, and ten councillors, with a town clerk, procurator fiscal, and chamberlain. The provost and bailies act as justices of the peace. Paisley returns one member to the Legislature, the present representative being William Dunn, Esq. Gas was first introduced in 1824, and all the streets are illuminated with it, and the town is well supplied with water.

A young lady of some historical notoriety was the original cause of Paisley becoming a manufacturing town. In 1697, a daughter of the Laird of Bargarran, aged eleven years, named Christina Shaw, preferred a charge of bewitching her against a servant girl, with whom she had quarrelled, and nineteen alleged confederates, seven of whom were condemned, and six of the number burnt on Gallow green, Paisley. The inciter to this detestable act of superstitious cruelty subsequently acquired great skill in spinning fine yarn. Her first production having been sold very advantageously at Bath by Lady Blantyre to the lace makers, stimulated Miss Shaw to extend her transactions by availing herself of the co-operation of a relative in Holland. The demand for this thread soon became great, and the most extensive manufacturers who arose in Scotland at that period acknowledged "the bewitched lady" as their originator. She afterwards became the wife of the minister of Kilmours. Coarse linen checks were the first fabrics produced by the Paisley looms; to these succeeded others of a lighter kind, such as lawns, both figured and plain. Silk gauze then took the lead, about the year 1760, and Spitalfields soon yielded to its more successful competitor, for such was the celebrity of Paisley gauze that warehouses were engaged for its sale in London, Dublin, and Paris. The produce of this article, together with sewing thread, lawn and linen gauze, amounted for the year 1784 to £579,000, and more than 26,000 persons were employed in their fabrication. But the demand for the popular gauze rapidly decreased, and soon became insignificant. Muslin, cambric and cotton thread were the next productions of Paisley industry and skill; to these succeeded silk and cotton shawls, scarfs and plaids composed of silk and merino wool. These still continue to exhibit the ingenuity and taste of the Paisley weavers, and in the manufacture of them they have arrived at great perfection. In Paisley and its neighbourhood are numerous thread and cotton spinning mills, bleaching and printing works, dyehouses, power loom factories, iron and brass foundries, engineers' and millwrights' shops, timber yards, a brewery, a distillery, soap, starch and corn flour manufactories, and a very extensive tannery. There are seven banking establishments; these are branches of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Bank of Scotland, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the British Linen Co., the Commercial Bank of Scotland, and the Royal Bank of Scotland. There is likewise the Savings Bank of Paisley. Two newspapers are published in Paisley, viz., the Express, daily, and the Paisley and Renfrewshire Gazette, weekly.

Paisley contains nine churches connected with the Establishment—viz., the Abbey, the High Church, St. George's, the Martyrs', the North, the South, the Middle, the Gaelic, now known as St. Columba church, and Greenlaw. There are eight Free churches, one of which has a service in Gaelic every Sabbath forenoon, eight United Presbyterian, one Reformed Presbyterian, two Episcopalian, one Congregationalist, four Baptist, one Methodist, one Original Secession, one New Jerusalem, one Evangelical Union, and two Roman Catholic. By far the most magnificent religious edifice is the Coats Memorial Baptist Church, now nearly completed, and erected in memory of the deceased philanthropist, Thomas Coats, Esq. The situation of each and the names of their respective ministers will be found on a subsequent page. Many charitable institutions and schools are liberally maintained by the inhabitants of Paisley. Among them the Infirmary, the Royal Victoria Eye Infirmary, the Town Hospital or Poorhouse, the Philosophical Institution, the Humane Society, the Industrial School, the Roman Catholic School, Sabbath schools, and several excellent schools under the Paisley School Board. Of the Board schools that most worthy of notice is the Grammar School and Academy, in which several of the higher branches of education are taught; and six elementary schools are situated in the north, north-west, east, south, and west districts of the town respectively. The Camphill School is situated on an eminence, and will accommodate 2,800 scholars. This is the largest elementary school in Scotland and the third largest in the kingdom. The John Neilson Educational Institution, richly endowed by the late John Neilson, Esq. (a citizen of Paisley), was opened in 1852. It is a beautiful, massive structure, surmounted by a lofty dome, and from its elevated position, on which the Roman camp was placed, is a conspicuous ornament to the town. There are some friendly associations, Bible and missionary societies, a Free Library and Museum, the gift to the town of Sir Peter Coats, of Woodside, and Thomas Coats's Observatory. Public reading rooms for the working classes have been established by some of the principal manufacturers in different parts of the town. The post office in St. Mirren street is about to be replaced by a more commodious building now being erected in County place; its style is of the 17th century, and is intended to harmonise with its surroundings. In Gilmour street is a handsome structure, erected in 1847, as a Government School of Design. The Savings Bank of Paisley occupies premises in Gilmour street formerly used as a public coffee and reading room. There is a theatre and a music hall, the latter being opened occasionally; and races are held annually in August on a picturesque course half a mile from the town, near the Greenock road. This ground, comprising 40 acres of land, round which is the race-course, has, by Act of Parliament, become the property of the community, and is now named St. James's Park. One of the finest ornaments to the town are the Fountain Gardens, which were the noble gift of Thomas Coats, Esq., of Ferguslie House. They extend between Love street and Caledonia street, are tastefully laid out, and contain every necessary for the convenience and comfort of the public. The ground is six acres in extent. A large and ornamental fountain is fixed in the centre, and a smaller one at each of the four angles of the gardens. A workhouse was erected in 1850. It occupies a commanding situation in the upper part of the town. The style is Elizabethan, and there is accommodation for six hundred inmates. Adjoining is the Lunatic Asylum, built in the same style, and capable of containing ninety-eight patients. In the immediate neighbourhood is the Burgh or Riccarton Asylum, a large handsome building, which, from its elevated position forms a prominent feature on the south side of the town. It cost £24,000. Near to this asylum is the Brodie Park, a farm containing 26 acres, bequeathed to the town council of Paisley many years ago by the late Mr. Brodie on behalf of the community, for all time.

Paisley may boast of having been the birthplace or residence of several individuals noted for genius or science. Wilson, the celebrated American ornithologist, and Taunhill, the lyric poet, were natives of Paisley; and the distinguished Dr. Witherspoon, long minister of one of the parishes, wrote several of his best works here, prior to his emigration. Here the celebrated John Wilson (Christopher North) was born. The country around Paisley (except on the north, where a wide-spread fertile plain expands itself, known by the name of the "Carse of Renfrewshire") is most agreeably diversified by gentle risings, by wood, by water, and, in short, by all the constituents of the soft and beautiful. A fall in the river Cart, just above the town, deserves mention. The weekly market is held on Thursday, and the fairs on the third Thursdays in February and May, and the second Thursday in August and November respectively. February and August are the principal for cattle; August fair and races take place at the same date, and last for three days. Those of May and November are mostly for hiring servants. According to the returns for 1871, the population of the town was 48,267, in 1881, 55,642, and in 1891, 66,407.

LINWOOD is a pleasant village in the parish of Kilbarchan, situated on the river Cart, distant about 3 miles W. from Paisley, its post town. Paper making and cotton spinning are extensively carried on here, several ironstone pits are wrought, and the manufacturing of shale oil is carried on in the neighbourhood. The religious and educational establishments are an Established and a Roman Catholic church, and a day school. Population in 1881, 1,893.

INKERMAN, BALACLAVA, and CLIPPENS are mining villages between 2 and 3 miles W. from Paisley, their post town. The two former places sprung into existence about the time of the Crimean war, and are named in commemoration of the noted battles. They contained a population of over 1,000, but this number has been reduced because of the decline in the mining industry.

PORT GLASGOW, KILMALCOLM AND LANGBANK.

PORT GLASGOW is a seaport and opulent burgh of barony and regality, pleasantly situated on the south bank of the river Clyde, 20 miles N.W. from Glasgow, and 3 E. from Greenock, on the Greenock section of the Caledonian line of railway. It is protected on the south by a range of high hills, and an extensive view of corresponding eminences presents itself on the north. The lower grounds in the vicinity of the town are embellished with handsome villas, to which are generally attached excellent gardens. The town stands immediately contiguous to the old barony and village of Newark, at the eastern extremity of which is the ancient castle formerly occupied by the barons of the name of Maxwell, now the property of Sir M. Shaw-Stewart, Bart. It is a fine old ruin, in good preservation, and the situation is much admired for its commanding view of the Clyde and adjacent picturesque scenery, particularly that wild and singularly-formed rocky eminence on which Dumbarton Castle stands. Port Glasgow is neatly built, the streets running at right angles. It possesses a Town House (erected in 1815, at a cost of nearly £12,000), comprising a council chamber, court hall, police station and offices for the accommodation of the town clerk, fiscal and other public officers. This pile of buildings, which is of the finest Grecian architecture, is surmounted by an elegant spire one hundred and fifty feet in height, and adorned with a good clock. The Town Hall, situated in Princes street, is a stately structure of imposing exterior, and affords ample accommodation for public meetings, &c. The Customs House is a handsome building, and contains offices and rooms for the different officers in that branch of the revenue. The Moffat Library, containing library, reading, billiard and smoking rooms, is an elegant building at the north end of King street, erected in 1837, from part of a bequest left by the late James Moffat, merchant, Port Glasgow. From the same bequest the Carnegie Park Orphan Homes, situated at the east end of the town, have recently been built at a cost of about £12,000. The trade of Port Glasgow has been for many years gradually improving; the tonnage employed in the American trade is very considerable, and there is a fair share of Indian and general imports. It has the superior advantage of an extensive wet dock, constructed at great expense. The harbours, which are large and commodious, are remarkable for their facility of entry and egress, and are accessible to vessels of the largest tonnage at all times of the tide. Contiguous to the harbours is a large craning dock, the first of the kind constructed in Scotland, and which since its construction has been enlarged and improved at a very considerable cost. Connected with the town are seven ship-building establishments, some of them upon an extensive scale, and giving employment to many hands. There are also various branches of manufacture established here, consisting principally of saw mills, roversies, sail cloth factories, engineers, and sail makers. Port Glasgow formerly belonged to the parish of Newark. In 1695 it was erected into a separate parochial district, and in 1775 the town was constituted a burgh of barony, and its government confided to a provost, two magistrates and seven councillors; it joins with Renfrew, Rutherglen, Dumbarton and Kilmarnock in returning one member to Parliament. The present representative is Stephen Williamson, Esq. A burgh police court sits every Thursday, and a justice of peace court on alternate Mondays. Through the public spirit of the inhabitants a new parish church was erected upon the site of old one. In external appearance it is handsome, and its interior is chaste, elegant and convenient. There are also a quoad sacra parish church, three Free churches, three for United Presbyterians, and a place of worship each for Episcopalians and Roman Catholics. Three schools have been erected, two by the School Board, at a cost of over £14,000, situated in Jean street and at Clunie Park, and the other in Balfour street, built by the Roman Catholics, at a cost of £8,000. There is an annual fair, which takes place on the first Thursday in July, and continues for three days. The population in 1881 was 18,294, and in 1891, 14,708. KILMALCOLM is a village situated on the east side of the parish of its name, on the road from the Bridge of Weir to Port Glasgow, 10 miles N.W. from Paisley, 7 S.E. from Greenock, and rather more than at distance in the same direction from Johnstone. It is an agricultural district intersected by the Gryffs and Duchal streams, whose banks are well cultivated. Consequent upon the opening of the Greenock and Argyshire railway, which has a station in the village, this district has become a favourite summer residence. Its situation is sheltered, and the salubrity of its atmosphere is highly spoken of. A large number of tasteful villas have been erected, a number of shops of a superior class have been opened, and a Branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland is established here. There is also an excellent modern hotel (the Buchanan Arms) close to the station, which affords ample accommodation for visitors. The village is well lighted with gas. The Kilmacolm Hydropathic Establishment and Sanatorium is a fine building, standing 450 feet above the sea level, and commands an extensive view. From the tower are seen Ben Lomond, Ben Ledi, and the whole range of Cowal hills from the Gareloch, on the Clyde, to Gouffell, in Arran. The grounds extend to upwards of 22 acres. Population in 1881, 1,170, and in 1891, 3,649.

LANGBANK is a small village in the parish of Erskine, about 3 miles S. E. from Port Glasgow. It is pleasantly situated on the Clyde, and is rapidly growing into favour as a country residence. A church, under the Establishment, and also one for United Presbyterians, both modern erections, are in the village. The former is a plain stone edifice with bell tower, whilst the latter has greater pretensions to architectural beauty, being ornamented with a tower and spire of considerable elevation. There is a good Board school in the village, and a station on the Greenock section of the Caledonian railway. Population returned with the parish.

RENFREW,

WITH INCHINNAN AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

RENFREW is an ancient town and royal burgh, the capital of the county and parish of its name; 50 miles W. from Edinburgh, 18 E. by a s. from Port Glasgow, 6 W. from Glasgow, and 3 N. from Paisley; situated a short distance from the Clyde, and one mile east from the river Cart. In the year 1396 Renfrew received its charter from Robert III., and in 1614 James VI. granted a charter for a school. In old charters the name of this place is variously written Renfrew, Ranfrew, and, as it is now spelt, Renfrew; it is composed of two British words, ren (or rhyn), a point or promontory, and frew, a flow or flow—implying a point of land which cleaves the flowing tide into two streams; one sometimes its course up the Clyde, the other pursuing its way up the Cart. The word "Renfrew" hence means the tidal cape, or peninsula. Walter, the first Stewart, built a castle here, on a small height called Castlehill, on the margin of the bank of the Clyde; and Renfrew was an early and favored residence of the Stewarts, long ere they ascended the Scottish throne. The present town consists of a long street, from which several smaller ones issue. There are established two extensive shipbuilding yards, with slips capable of rising vessels of large burthen, and a large forge. The town is well lighted with gas. There is a commodious and substantial wharf, at which the largest vessels that frequent the river can discharge and load with the same facility as at Glasgow. The main line of the Paisley and Renfrew railway is connected with this wharf, where passengers embark and land from the different steam boats navigating the Clyde, and goods are shipped and discharged by the Liverpool, Irish and other boats. As a royal burgh, Renfrew is governed by a provost, two bailies, and nine councillors. It joins with Port Glasgow (and other places there named), in returning one member to Parliament, the present representative being Stephen Williamson, Esq. The vicinity of the town is adorned by some fine estates and mansions; of the latter, the most worthy of the stranger's notice are Elderslie, the residence of A. A. Speirs, Esq., and Blythswood, the seat of Sir Archibald Campbell, Bart., both situated on the banks of the Clyde, and their beauty increased by delightful plantations. A magnificent courtsite every Monday, and quarter sessions are held on the first Tuesday in March, May, and August, and last Tuesday in October. The places of worship are an Established church, one for the United Presbyterians, a Free church, and a Roman Catholic chapel. There is also a Public Grammar school, and a school for Roman Catholics in the burgh. Fairs are held on the third Tuesday in May and the last Friday in June. The acreage of the parish is 4,311, and the population in 1881 was 7,439, and in 1891, 9,232, of which the town contains 6,756.

The parish of INCHINNAN is situated to the north-west of Renfrew, and is watered by the Clyde, the White Cart, and the Gryffe rivers. At the confluence of the two latter streams is a fine bridge of ten arches, forming a communication with Renfrew; to enable vessels navigating between Paisley and the Clyde to pass this bridge a canal has been cut, across which is a handsome iron swing bridge. The road from Glasgow to Greenock passes through the whole length of this parish. Acreage, 3,330; population in 1881, 508, and in 1891, 667.

WEMYSS BAY, SKELMORLIE (Ayrshire), AND INVERKIP.

WEMYSS BAY, in the parish of Inverkip, 6 miles s.w. from Greenock, is beautifully situated on the banks of the Clyde. It is fast rising into notice as a watering place. Many respectable families have taken up their residence here, and a number of handsome villas have been erected, all of which are well tenanted in the summer season. There is an English Episcopal church and a chapel belonging to the Roman Catholics. The Caledonian Railway Company has a terminal station here, on their Wemyss Bay section, and their steamers call to take in passengers for Largs, Millport, Fairlie, Rothesay, and other places. The Clydeade Bank, Limited, has a branch in the village.

SKELMORLIE (Ayrshire) is immediately connected with Wemyss Bay, and vies with it in beauty of situation and popularity as a summer resort. The houses are generally of a superior class, and a few respectable shops are established. Gas works have also been erected. A hydropathic institution is in operation, under the superintendence of Dr. Currie. It is romantically situated upon a cliff, rising to a perpendicular height of 110 feet above the shore road. From the windows magnificent views may be obtained of the Arran hills, away down the estuary, the Island of Bute, and Rothesay Bay, the entrance to the Kyles of Bute, and Loch Stiven. A church in connection with the Establishment and one for United Presbyterians are the places of worship.

INVERKIP is a village in the parish of its name, 4 miles s.w. from Greenock, situated on the Kipp water, which intersects the district from east to west, and falls into the Clyde. The village is sometimes called the "Auld Kirk." The Daff and some other rivulets irrigate the district. In their course they are broken into small cascades, which produce a pleasing effect, and the meadows through which they pass are finely embanked. Ardgowan House, the seat of Sir Michael Robert Shaw Stewart, Bart., is pleasantly situated on a kind of peninsula, a little north of the village. It is a fine modern building, surrounded with beautiful and romantic pleasure grounds. Besides the parish church, which is a neat and handsome edifice, surmounted by a spire, with a clock, there is a Free church and one for Episcopalians, and there is also a Board school in the village. Communication with other towns is rendered easy by means of the Wemyss Bay section of the Caledonian railway, which has a station here. Area of the parish, 13,549. Population in 1831, 5,959, and of the village 580.

ROSS & CROMARTY SHIRE.

THIS is a large county in the north of Scotland, and includes the districts of Easter and Wester Ross, Ardmeanach or the Black Isle, the Island of Lewis, and the former county of Cromarty. Under the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, Ross and Cromarty are now united for all purposes under the title of the county of Ross and Cromarty. It is bounded on the north by Sutherlandshire, on the south by Inverness-shire, on the east by the German Ocean, and on the west by the Western Sea. From east to west it extends 67 miles, and from north to south 58 miles. It comprises an area of 3,129 square miles, or 2,008,065 acres, and in point of size ranks as the third, and in population as the twelfth of the counties of Scotland.

SOIL, SURFACE, CLIMATE, PRODUCE, &c.—The portion of this extensive county capable of cultivation is very small. The arable lands extend along the eastern coast, and are found in patches here and there on the western; a great proportion of the low lands of Easter Ross, and a small portion of those near Dingwall, is loamy clay, the rest being light soil of various qualities. The whole of this comprehensive shire, except a district on the east side called Easter Ross, is mountainous, wild and pastoral; the mountains are for the most part in groups, many of them reaching a considerable elevation. Ben Wyvis is considered the most lofty, rising upwards of 3,700 feet above the level of the sea. Almost the whole of the west coast presents magnificent mountain scenery, and the interior is in general picturesque. The climate is steady, and exhibits the extremes of long, dreary, cold winters and some very hot summer weather; the west coast is subject to heavy rains. The natural forests, which formerly covered large tracts, have nearly all disappeared, with the exception of the birch and some oaks in different parts of the county; the remains of firwood are extensive, and the trunks of oaks of an immense size are still to be seen. Planting is prosecuted with great spirit, large additions having been in progress for many years. The improvements effected in farming within the last seventy years have completely changed the aspect of the district of Easter Ross, and indeed this portion as well as other parts of the county may now compete in the skilful management of the land with any other division in Scotland. The chief cereals cultivated are wheat, barley, and oats. The mineralogy of the shire is interesting to the geologist, but of little value in a directly useful point of view. Limestone occurs in several localities on the west coast, but there is a general destitution of coal throughout the county. The salmon fishery is carried on to a considerable extent in the different rivers and estuaries, and that for herrings is pursued with moderate success, the takes of this fish having of late years become uncertain. There are no manufactures of any importance, but in the neighbourhood of Dingwall, Invergordon, and Tain several extensive distilleries are established.

RIVERS, LAKES AND RAILWAYS.—The principal rivers on the east side of the county are the Conan, which flows into the Cromarty Firth, and the Oikel and the Carrou, which pass into the Dornoch Firth. The largest stream on the west coast is the Ewe, which has a short course from Loch Maree. The Conan and its principal branch, the Raney (or Blackwater), form some falls of considerable height and beauty. The indentations of the sea, or saltwater lakes, on the west coast proceeding from north to south, are Loch Enard, Loch Broom, Loch Grienord, Loch Ewe, Gair Loch, Loch Torridon, Loch Keeshorn, Loch Carron, and Loch Alsh, with its inner southern arm, Loch Duich. The county likewise possesses a great number of lakes of fresh water in the interior, but none of them save Loch Maree near the west coast, are of sufficient magnitude or beauty to excite interest. The Highland railway intersects this county, and presents many attractions. It traverses some of the grandest scenery in the Highlands hitherto comparatively unknown, and affords the advantage of a direct communication with the west coast. No railway route in the kingdom, and probably not even on the continent, presents within the same space of time so great a variety of fine scenery. Stromes Ferry is the terminus, from thence the steamers of the Company sail to the Isles of Skye and Lewis.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—The county contains three royal burghs, namely, Dingwall, Tain, and Fortrose; the two former, with the town of Cromarty, join with Kirkwall, Wick, and Dornoch, in returning one member to Parliament, and the shire of Ross and Cromarty sends another, the present representative being James Galloway Weir, Esq. The parliamentary constituency numbered in 1891-92, 8,966. The burgh of Fortrose is associated with Inverness, Nairn and Forres in parliamentary representation. The Lord-Lieutenant is Sir Kenneth Smith Mackenzie, Bart., of Gairloch. According to the census returns for 1881, the county contains a population of 78,547, and by those for 1891, 77,751, showing a decrease in the ten years of 796. The valuation of the county in 1891-92 (exclusive of railways) was £263,081; and of railways, £23,292.

CROMARTY,

RESOLIS, JAMIMAVILLE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CROMARTY is a parliamentary burgh, and the capital of its parish and county, 19½ miles N.E. from Inverness, 17 N.W. from Nairn, 11 S. from Tain, 9 M. by E. from Portree, and 4 W. by N. from Invergordon; situated upon a prominent rocky jutting into the neck of the sea connecting the Moray with the Cromarty Firth, and at a short distance from the entrance into a harbour esteemed one of the safest and most capacious in Britain. In this haven—the Portus Salutis of the Romans—vessels of any tonnage may ride in perfect security. The entrance from the sea lies between two wooded headlands, called the "Sutors of Cromarty," which almost meet and reflect each other's form, producing an effect, in combination with the general scenery, eminently picturesque. The view from the hill of Cromarty is truly delightful, and is the admiration of every visitor. Beneath the south Sutor is a profound chasm, called, "Charlie's Seat," and a petrifying stream called the "Dropping Cave," both attractive natural curiosities, never overlooked by the investigating stranger or tourist. Near the north Sutor are seven sunken rocks, termed the "Kings' Sons," so named from the circumstance (according to tradition) of three kings' sons having been drowned near these rocks when on their way from Denmark, and to their memory were erected three obelisks, traced with strange characters, one in the parish of Nigg, and two in the parish of Fearn. The bay of Cromarty, which has a beautiful pebbly beach, presents ample facilities for bathing. On an eminence immediately behind the town is a monument, consisting of a column 40 feet high, surmounted by a full-size figure, to the memory of the late Hugh Miller, the eminent geologist, and author of the "Testimony of the Rocks," "Scenes and Legends," "My Schools and Schoolmasters," &c., who was a native of Cromarty. The execution of the work was by Mr. Handyside Ritchie, of Edinburgh. The herring and white fishery is prosecuted in this quarter with persevering industry and general success; large quantities are exported to foreign countries, and the remainder (with the exception of the local consumption) to the London and various home markets.

The monetary transactions of the place are facilitated by branches of the Caledonian Banking Co., Limited, and the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited. Cromarty was anciently a royal burgh, but was disfranchised by an act of the Scottish Privy Council, in compliance with the solicitation of Sir John Urquhart, proprietor of the estate of Cromarty; it now, however, holds the rank stated above, and joins with Kirkwall, Wick, Dornoch, Tain and Dingwall in returning one member to Parliament. The present representative is Sir John Pender. The parish church, an ancient building, stands at the east of the town; a chapel for the accommodation of the Gaelic portion of the community is situated on the hill south of the town, and a Free church is the only other place of worship. In the burgh is a good public hall, erected by the artillery volunteers as a drill hall and place for entertainments. Invergordon is the nearest railway station, 6 miles distant. Cromarty parish possesses an area of 8,017 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 2,009, and in 1891, 2,007, of which the burgh contained 1,856.

RESOLIS parish lies on the south side of Cromarty Firth, and consists of a portion of the peninsula called the "BLACK ISLE," being eight miles long with a breadth of three, having a coast line of about ten miles. It is the village of JAMIMAVILLE, 4½ miles from Cromarty. The nearest railway station is at Invergordon, 2 miles distant. Population in 1891, 1,839.

DINGWALL,

STRATHPEFFER, FODDERTY, CONTIN, KNOCKBAIN, URRAY, URQUHART, KILLEARNAN, MARYBURGH, CONON BRIDGE, MUIR OF ORD, AND AUCHTERNEED.

DINGWALL is a parish, royal burgh and market town, the latter 178 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 21 N.W. from Inverness, 20 S.W. from Cromarty, 13 S.W. from Invergordon, and 9 N. from Beaulieu, pleasantly situated in the eastern part of Ross-shire, on a fertile plain, near the western extremity of the beautiful Firth of Cromarty, which is navigable at high water for light craft as far as the town. About three-quarters of a mile from the town is a pier, or jetty, for the convenience of vessels discharging their cargoes or taking in freight. It is supposed that at some remote period Dingwall was much more extensive than it now is, as causeways and foundations of buildings have been found some hundreds of yards from the site of the present town. As it now exists Dingwall is neat and well built, and consists of one main street, well paved, and a few smaller ones; it is copiously supplied with excellent water from a spring above the town, and from Ussie valley to the south-west, into which it is conveyed by means of pipes. The Town House, near the centre of the burgh, is a curious old building with a spire and clock; and the church is a plain structure on the north side of the town. In the neighbourhood of the latter edifice is an obelisk, fifty-seven feet in height, erected to the memory of George, first Earl of Cromartie, who, eccentric at death as in life, in accordance with his last injunction, was buried here. Near the town formerly stood the mansion of the powerful and noble family of Ross; a rude fragment in the garden attached to a villa is now all that remains of that once princely domicile.
Dingwall was erected a royal burgh by Alexander II. and its charter was renewed by James IV.; it is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and two councillors, and joins with Cromarty, Tain, Dornoch, Wick, and Kirkwall in returning one member to Parliament, being at present represented by Sir John Pender. Under the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, Ross and Cromarty shires were created a county council, the meetings being held in the County Buildings in the months of May, October, and December. The town is eligibly situated for the purpose of a more extensive trade than it enjoys; the business is chiefly of a local character, manufactures, with the exception of the distilling of spirits, not having as yet found a seat here. In the High street are several handsome and spacious hotels, where the best accommodation can be obtained. In the same street are branches respectively of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Caledonian Banking Company, Limited, and the Bank of Scotland. A little to the east of the town stand the County Buildings, forming a very conspicuous feature in their general appearance. They were completed in 1845 at a cost of £5,000, and contain a county room, a sheriff court room, and county clerk's and other offices, together with one of the most complete prisons for its size in the kingdom. To the east of the town is an extensive distillery, known as the Ben Wyvis Distillery, owned by the Ben Wyvis Whisky Distillers, Limited. Dingwall is surrounded by some of the most beautiful scenery in Scotland. The valley of Strathpeffer reaches to the westward, and it is as lovely as any Lowland vale; while the mountains at its head present all the rugged grandeur of the Highlands. The hill on the north side of the town, a beautiful wooded declivity, will remind the traveller of the celebrated hill of Kinnoull, near Perth. About a mile and a half from Dingwall, on the road to Beaulieu, is the small village of MARYBURGH, seated on the left bank of the Conon, on the opposite side of which river is CONON BRIDGE. In the former village a Free church and manse were erected in 1858. The market of Dingwall is held every Wednesday, and the fairs on the third Wednesday in January, the third Wednesday in February, the first Wednesday in June, the first Tuesday in July, the first Wednesday in September and in November, and the Tuesday next before Christmas (new style). According to the census returns of 1881, the parliamentary and royal burgh contained a population of 1,921, and by those for 1911, 2,607.

The mineral well of STRATHPEFFER, situated at the upper extremity of a fertile valley of that name, which stretches about 3 miles due west from Dingwall, occasioned the erection of some neat villas or cottages for the accommodation of invalid visitors, and there are three good hotels. The small hamlet of AUCHTERNEED is about 2 miles distant from the pump room, or public lounge, attached to the principal well, and many of the adjacent farmhouses likewise furnish lodgings to strangers when their influx is great, as it generally is during the months of June, July and August. The situation of these wells is romantic, the neighbouring country being fertile and exceedingly beautiful. The springs rise through the shaly sandstone which is prevalent in the district; and at no great distance from the lofty mountain Ben Wyvis, one of the most conspicuous eminences in the North of Scotland. The waters have long been known as medicinal, and an analysis of their composition was published by Mr. Donald Munro in the "Philosophical Transactions" for 1772. They were brought into considerable celebrity by Dr. Morrison, an Aberdeenshire gentleman, who was an enthusiast for their excellent qualities, affirming them to be the strongest and most salubrious in Great Britain. They have subsequently been visited by various scientific individuals, particularly by Dr. T. Thompson, in May, 1823, who analysed the water with the most scrupulous exactness. They are strongly charged with sulphuretted hydrogen gas. Large additions have been made to this establishment, which is now one of the most complete in Great Britain. Strathpeffer is bounded on the north by a high sandstone ridge, and on the south it is skirted by the steep green wooded acclivities of Knock-Farrel, one of the most extensive and best preserved trifted fells (or ancient beacon hills) in the country. The public road bounds the grounds of the ancient seat of the Cromarrie family, Castle Leod, a castellated mansion, still inhabited. The same road, on quitting the strath, runs by the romantic and beautifully wooded knolls of Conl, the property of Sir Arthur G. R. Mackenzie, Bart., and the manse, village and island plain of Contin, beyond which the visitor of this district may either wander along the picturesque shores of Loch Achilty and the sheepwalks of Conrie to the cascades of the Conon, or, holding more to the north, he will be delighted with the falls of Rogie, on the Blackwater, which flows from the upland lake and moors of Strathgarve. Nearer to the mineral spa, he may likewise be gratified with a walk through the lawns and pleasure grounds of Brahan Castle, the ancient and princely residence of the Sessforth family. This beautiful seat is situated below the southern slope of Knock-Farrel, and commands an extensive, magnificent, and pleasingly varied prospect, comprehending the partially wooded and cultivated courses of the river Conon and Orin. The Dingwall and Skye railway traverses some of the finest scenery in the Highlands, and includes views of Loch Muir, Loch Carron, Loch Luichart, Strath Carron and other districts comparatively unknown, and forms a direct communication with the west coast. Tourists by this route may reach the Isle of Skye from London in twenty-four hours, and from other parts of the kingdom in proportionately less time. The terminus is a Strone Ferry, from which point steamers in connection with the railway convey passengers to the Isle of Skye and Lewis at regularly stated times.

CONTIN is a parish joining Fodderty on the west. It is 40 miles long by a mean breadth of 30, and is distant 7 miles S.W. from Dingwall. Strathpeffer is the nearest railway station, 3 miles distant. Area, 64,230. Population in 1881, 1,445, and in 1891, 1,471.
